C.B. Heberden was a Fellow &
Tutor in classics of Brasenose

College, Oxford, in the 1880's; later he was Head of the College as Principal - died in 1922.
He was a descendant of the famous Dr. Wm. Heberden, physician to the Royal Family in the second half of the 18th Century

The correction in the text was C.B. Heberden.
He has given me it with a fine-tooth comb.

I came by his list with a batch of other Heberden family books in London, England, in 1932.

This must be a 2nd edition

I cannot ascertain the publication date.
Note that it was published not only in London but also in The Lake Country itself - at Windermere

PREFACE.

The Title-page announces that this is only a portion of a poem; and the Reader must be here apprised that it belongs to the second part of a long and laborious Work, which is to consist of three parts.—The Author will candidly acknowledge that, if the first of these had been completed, and in such a manner as to satisfy his own mind, he should have preferred the natural order of publication, and have given that to the world first; but, as the second division of the Work was designed to refer more to passing events, and to an existing state of things, than the others were meant to do, more continuous exertion was naturally bestowed upon it, and greater progress made here than in the rest of the poem; and as this part does not depend upon the preceding, to a degree which will materially injure its own peculiar interest, the Author, complying with the earnest entreaties of some valued Friends, presents the following pages to the Public.

It may be proper to state whence the poem, of which The Excursion is a part, derives its Title of THE RECLUSE.—Several years ago, when the Author retired to his native mountains, with the hope of being enabled to construct a literary Work that might live, it was a reasonable thing that he should take a review of his own mind, and examine how far Nature and Education had qualified him for such employment. As subsidiary to this preparation, he undertook to record, in verse, the origin and progress of his own powers, as far as he was acquainted with them. That Work, addressed to a dear Friend, most distinguished for his knowledge and genius, and to whom the Author's Intellect is deeply indebted, has been long finished; and the result of the investigation, which gave rise to it, was a determination to compose a philosophical poem, containing views of Man, Nature, and Society ; and to be entitled, the Recluse ; as having for its principal subject the sensations and opinions of a poet living in retirement.—The preparatory poem is biographical, and conducts the history of the Author's mind to the point when he was emboldened to hope that his faculties were sufficiently matured for entering upon the arduous labour which he had proposed to himself ; and the two Works have the same kind of relation to each other, if he may so express himself, as the ante-chapel has to the body of a gothic church. Continuing this allusion, he may be permitted to add, that his minor Pieces, which have been long before the Public, when they shall be properly arranged, will be found by the attentive Reader, to have such connection with the main Work as may give them claim to be likened to the little cells, oratories, and sepulchral recesses, ordinarily included in those edifices.

The Author would not have deemed himself justified in saying, upon this occasion, so much of performances, either unfinished or unpublished, if he had not thought that the labour bestowed by him upon what he has heretofore and now laid before the Public, entitled him to candid attention for such a statement as he thinks necessary to throw light upon his endeavours to please and, he would hope, to benefit his countrymen.—Nothing further need be added, than that the first and third parts of The Recluse will consist chiefly of meditations in the Author's own person ; and, that in the intermediate part (The Excursion), the intervention of characters speaking is employed, and something of a dramatic form adopted.

It is not the Author's intention formally to announce a system : it was more animating to him to proceed in a different course ; and if he shall succeed in conveying to the mind clear thoughts, lively images, and strong feelings, the Reader will have no difficulty in extracting the system for himself. And in the meantime the following passage, taken from the conclusion of the first book of the Recluse, may be acceptable as a kind of Prospectus of the design and scope of the whole Poem.

"On Man, on Nature, and on Human Life,
 Musing in solitude, I oft perceive
 Fair trains of imagery before me rise,
 Accompanied by feelings of delight,
 Pure, or with no unpleasing sadness mixed ;
 And I am conscious of affecting thoughts
 And dear remembrances, whose presence soothes
 Or elevates the Mind, intent to weigh
 The good and evil of our mortal state.
 —To these emotions, whencesoe'er they come,
 Whether from breath of outward circumstance,
 Or from the Soul — an impulse to herself —
 I would give utterance in numerous verse,
 Of Truth, of Grandeur, Beauty, Love, and Hope,
 And melancholy Fear subdued by Faith ;
 Of blessed consolations in distress ;
 Of moral strength, and intellectual Power ;
 Of joy in widest commonality spread ;
 Of the individual Mind that keeps her own
 Inviolatè retirement, subject there
 To Conscience only, and the law supreme
 Of that Intelligence which governs all —
 I sing :— ' fit audience let me find though few ! ' "

"So prayed, more gaining than he asked, the Bard —
 Holiest of men. Urania, I shall need
 Thy guidance, or a greater Muse, if such Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven !
 For I must tread on shadowy ground, must sink
 Deep — and, aloft ascending, breathe in worlds
 To which the heaven of heavens is but a veil.
 All strength — all terror, single or in bands,
 That ever was put forth in personal form —
 Jehovah — with his thunder, and the choir
 Of shouting Angels, and the empyreal thrones —
 I pass them unalarmed. Not Chaos, not
 The darkest pit of lowest Erebus,

Nor aught of blinder vacancy, scooped out
By help of dreams—can breed such fear and awe
As fall upon us often when we look
Into our Minds, into the Mind of Man—
My haunt, and the main region of my song.
—Beauty—a living Presence of the earth,
Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
Which craft of delicate Spirits hath composed
From earth's materials—waits upon my steps ;
Pitches her tents before me as I move,
An hourly neighbour. Paradise, and groves
Elysian, Fortunate Fields—like those of old
Sought in the Atlantic Main—why should they be
A history only of departed things,
Or a mere fiction of what never was ?
For the discerning intellect of Man,
When wedded to this godly universe
In love and holy passion, shall find these
A simple produce of the common day.
—I, long before the blissful hour arrives,
Would chant, in lonely peace the spousal verse
Of this great consummation :—and, by words
Which speak of nothing more than what we are,
Would I arouse the sensual from their sleep
Of Death, and win the vacant and the vain
To noble raptures ; while my voice proclaims
How exquisitely the individual Mind
(And the progressive powers perhaps no less
Of the whole species) to the external World
Is fitted :—and how exquisitely, too—
Theme this but little heard of among men—
The external World is fitted to the Mind ;
And the creation (by no lower name
Can it be called) which they with blended might Accomplish :—this is our high argument.
—Such grateful haunts foregoing, if I oft
Must turn elsewhere—to travel near the tribes

And fellowships of men, and see ill sights
Of maddening passions mutually inflamed ;
Must hear Humanity in fields and groves
Pipe solitary anguish ; or must hang
Brooding above the fierce confederate storm
Of sorrow, barricadoed evermore
Within the walls of cities—may these sounds
Have their authentic comment ; that even these Hearing, I be not downcast or forlorn !—
Come prophetic Spirit ! that inspir'st
The human Soul of universal earth,
Dreaming on things to come ; and dost possess
A metropolitan temple in the hearts
Of mighty Poets : upon me bestow
A gift of genuine insight ; that my Song
With star-like virtue in its place may shine,
Shedding benignant influence, and secure,
Itself from all malevolent effect
Of those mutations that extend their sway
Throughout the nether sphere !—And if with this
I mix more lowly matter ; with the thing
Contemplated, describe the Mind and Man
Contemplating ; and who, and what he was—
The transitory Being that beheld
This Vision ; when and where, and how he lived ;—
Be not this labour useless. If such theme
May sort with highest objects, then—dread Power !
Whose gracious favour is the primal source
Of all illumination—may my Life
Express the image of a better time,
More wise desires, and simpler manners ;—nurse
My Heart in genuine freedom : all pure thoughts
Be with me ;—so shall thy unfailing love
Guide, and support, and cheer me to the end !”

THE WANDERER.

A summer forenoon. — The Author reaches a ruined cottage upon a common, and there meets with a revered friend, the Wanderer, of whom he gives an account. — The Wanderer, while resting under the shade of the trees that surround the cottage, relates the history of its last inhabitant.

'Twas summer, and the sun had mounted high :
Southward the landscape indistinctly glared
Through a pale steam ; but all the northern downs,
In clearest air ascending, showed far off
A surface dappled o'er with shadows flung
From many a brooding cloud ; far as the sight
Could reach, those many shadows lay in spots
Determined and unmoved, with steady beams
Of bright and pleasant sunshine interposed ;
Pleasant to him who on the soft cool moss
Extends his careless limbs along the front
Of some huge cave, whose rocky ceiling casts
A twilight of its own, an ample shade,
Where the wren warbles, while the dreaming man,
Half conscious of the soothing melody,
With side-long eye looks out upon the scene,
By that impending covert made more soft,
More low and distant ! Other lot was mine ;
Yet with good hope that soon I should obtain
As grateful resting-place, and livelier joy.
Across a bare wide Common I was toiling
With languid feet, which by the slippery ground
Were baffled ; nor could my weak arm disperse
The host of insects gathering round my face,
And ever with me as I paced along.

Upon that open level stood a grove,
The wish'd-for port to which my steps were bound.
Thither I came, and there — amid the gloom
Spread by a brotherhood of lofty elms, —
Appeared a roofless hut ; four naked walls
That stared upon each other ! — I look'd around,
And to my wish and to my hope espied
Him whom I sought ; a man of reverend age,
But stout and hale, for travel unimpaired.
There was he seen upon the cottage bench,
Recumbent in the shade, as if asleep ;
An iron-pointed staff lay at his side.

Him had I mark'd the day before — alone
And in the middle of the public way
Station'd, as if to rest himself, with face
Turn'd towards the sun then setting, while that staff
Afforded to his figure, as he stood,
Detain'd for contemplation or repose,
Graceful support ; the countenance of the man
Was hidden from my view, and he himself
Unrecognized ; but, stricken by the sight,
With slacken'd footsteps I advanced, and soon
A glad congratulation we exchanged
At such unthought-of meeting. For the night
We parted, nothing willingly ; and now
He by appointment waited for me here,
Beneath the shelter of these clustering elms.

We were tried friends ; I from my childhood up
Had known him. In a little town obscure,*

* Hawkshead, a picturesque little town at the head of Esthwaite Water, is the place here alluded to ; and many are the pilgrimages annually made to view with curious interest, if not with reverence, the humble school-house where Wordsworth received much of his early culture ; and many a vain search has been made to discover the initials of the youthful poet upon the quaint black oak desk he used. These comfortless oak fixtures have

A market-village, seated in a track
Of mountains, where my school-day time was pass'd,
One room he own'd, the fifth part of a house,
A place to which he drew, from time to time,
And found a kind of home or harbour there.

He loved me ; from a swarm of rosy boys
Singled out me, as he in sport would say,
For my grave looks — too thoughtful for my years.
As I grew up, it was my best delight
To be his chosen comrade. Many a time,
On holidays, we wander'd through the woods,
A pair of random travellers we sate —
We walk'd ; he pleas'd me with his sweet discourse
Of things which he had seen ; and often touch'd
Abstrusest matter, reasonings of the mind
Turn'd inward ; or at my request he sang
Old songs — the product of his native hills ;
A skilful distribution of sweet sounds,
Feeding the soul, and eagerly imbibed
As cool refreshing water, by the care
Of the industrious husbandman diffused

probably remained from the foundation of the school by Edwin Sandys, Archbishop of York, in Queen Elizabeth's reign. Esthwaite Hall, on the western margin of the lake, now a mere farmhouse, was the Archbishop's birth-place ; his descendants hold estates of some extent in the vicinity. Wordsworth, in his school-days, lodged with a well-remembered ancient dame named Ann Tyson, and did not leave Hawkshead till his sixteenth year. At that period Hawkshead was a flourishing town ; the wool trade was considerable, its market was a bustling scene, and on stated hiring days it was a great rendezvous for servants and farmers. The school then numbered at least 100, and the residence in the town of so many youths of good connexions, added not a little to its prosperity. On examination days, the crowd of carriages and visitors presented an animated scene. All this is now much changed. The school, after a long period of neglect and depression, is, however, reviving under the able mastership of the Rev. H. Baines. A new school-room has been built, and many improvements carried out.

Through a parch'd meadow-ground in the time of drought.

Still deeper welcome found his pure discourse :
How precious when in riper days I learn'd
To weigh with care his words, and to rejoice
In the plain presence of his dignity !

O many are the poets that are sown
By nature ! men endow'd with highest gifts —
The vision, and the faculty divine —
Yet wanting the accomplishment of verse
(Which in the docile season of their youth
It was denied them to acquire, through lack
Of culture and the inspiring aid of books ;
Or haply by a temper too severe ;
Or a nice backwardness afraid of shame),
Nor having e'er, as life advanced, been led
By circumstances to take unto the height
The measure of themselves, these favour'd beings,
All but a scatter'd few, live out their time,
Husbanding that which they possess within,
And go to the grave unthought of. Strongest minds
Are often those of whom the noisy world
Hears least ; else surely this man had not left
His graces unreveal'd and unproclaim'd.
But, as the mind was fill'd with inward light,
So not without distinction had he lived,
Beloved and honour'd — far as he was known.
And some small portion of his eloquent speech,
And something that may serve to set in view
The feeling pleasures of his loneliness,
The doings, observations, which his mind
Had dealt with — I will here record in verse ;
Which, if with truth it correspond, and sink
Or rise, as venerable Nature leads,
The high and tender Muses shall accept
With gracious smile, deliberately pleased,

And listening Time reward with sacred praise.

Among the hills of Athol he was born :
There, on a small hereditary farm,
An unproductive slip of rugged ground,
His father dwelt ; and died in poverty ;
While he, whose lowly fortune I retrace,
The youngest of three sons, was yet a babe,
A little one unconscious of their loss.
But ere he had out-grown his infant days,
His widow'd mother, for a second mate,
Espoused the teacher of the village school ;
Who on her offspring zealously bestow'd
Needful instruction ; not alone in arts
Which to his humble duties appertain'd,
But in the lore of right and wrong, the rule
Of human kindness, in the peaceful ways
Of honesty, and holiness severe.
A virtuous household, though exceeding poor !
Pure livers were they all, austere and grave,
And fearing God ; the very children taught
Stern self-respect, a reverence for God's word,
And an habitual piety, maintain'd
With strictness scarcely known on English ground.

From his sixth year, the boy of whom I speak
In summer tended cattle on the hills ;
But, through the inclement and the perilous days
Of long-continuing winter, he repair'd
To his stepfather's school, that stood alone,
Sole building on a mountain's dreary edge,
Far from the sight of city, spire, or sound
Of minster clock ! From that bleak tenement
He, many an evening, to his distant home
In solitude returning, saw the hills
Grow larger in the darkness, all alone
Beheld the stars come out above his head,
And travell'd through the wood with no one near

To whom he might confess the things he saw.
So the foundations of his mind were laid,
In such communion, not from terror free,
While yet a child, and long before his time,
Had he perceived the presence and the power
Of greatness ; and deep feelings had impress'd
Great objects on his mind, with portraiture
And colour so distinct, that on his mind
They lay like substances, and almost seem'd
To haunt the bodily sense. He had received (Vigorous in native genius as he was)
A precious gift ; for, as he grew in years,
With these impressions would he still compare
All his remembrances, thoughts, shapes, and forms ;
And, being still unsatisfied with aught
Of dimmer character, he thence attain'd
An active power to fasten images
Upon his brain ; and on their pictured lines
Intensely brooded, even till they acquired
The liveliness of dreams. Nor did he fail,
While yet a child, with a child's eagerness
Incessantly to turn his ear and eye
On all things which the moving seasons brought
To feed such appetite : nor this alone
Appeased his yearning — in the after-day
Of boyhood, many an hour in caves forlorn.
And 'mid the hollow depths of naked crags
He sate, and e'en in their fix'd lineaments,
Or from the power of a peculiar eye,
Or by creative feeling overborne,
Or by predominance of thought oppress'd,
E'en in their fix'd and steady lineaments
He traced an ebbing and a flowing mind,
Expression ever varying !

Thus inform'd,
He had small need of books ; for many a tale

Traditionary, round the mountains hung,
And many a legend, peopling the dark woods,
Nourish'd Imagination in her growth,
And gave the Mind that apprehensive power
By which she is made quick to recognize
The moral properties and scope of things.
But eagerly he read, and read again,
Whate'er the minister's old shelf supplied ;
The life and death of martyrs, who sustain'd,
With will inflexible, those fearful pangs
Triumphantly display'd in records left
Of persecution, and the Covenant — times
Whose echo rings through Scotland to this hour !
And there, by lucky hap, had been preserved
A straggling volume, torn and incomplete,
That left half-told the preternatural tale,
Romance of giants, chronicle of fiends,
Profuse in garniture of wooden cuts
Strange and uncouth ; dire faces, figures dire,
Sharp-kneed, sharp-elbow'd, and lean-ankled too,
With long and ghostly shanks—forms which once seen
Could never be forgotten !

In his heart,
Where Fear sate thus, a cherish'd visitant,
Was wanting yet the pure delight of love
By sound diffused, or by the breathing air,
Or by the silent looks of happy things,
Or flowing from the universal face
Of earth and sky. But he had felt the power
Of Nature, and already was prepared
By his intense conceptions, to receive
Deeply the lesson deep of love which he,
Whom Nature, by whatever means, has taught
To feel intensely, cannot but receive.

From early childhood, even as hath been said,

From his sixth year he had been sent abroad
In summer to tend herds : such was his task
Thenceforward till the later day of youth.
O then what soul was his, when, on the tops
Of the high mountains, he beheld the sun
Rise up and bathe the world in light ! He look'd —
Ocean and earth, the solid frame of earth
And ocean's liquid mass, beneath him lay
In gladness and deep joy. The clouds were touch'd,
And in their silent faces did he read
Unutterable love. Sound needed none,
Nor any voice of joy ; his spirit drank
The spectacle ; sensation, soul, and form,
All melted into him ; they swallow'd up
His animal being ; in them did he live,
And by them did he live : they were his life.
In such access of mind, in such high hour
Of visitation from the living God,
Thought was not ; in enjoyment it expired.
No thanks he breathed, he proffer'd no request ;
Rapt into still communion that transcends
The imperfect offices of prayer and praise,
His mind was a thanksgiving to the Power
That made him ; it was blessedness and love !

A Herdsman on the lonely mountain-tops,
Such intercourse was his, and in this sort
Was his existence oftentimes possess'd.
Oh ! then how beautiful, how bright, appear'd
The written Promise. He had early learn'd
To reverence the Volume which displays
The mystery — the life which cannot die :
But in the mountains did he feel his faith ;
There did he see the writing — all things there
Breathed immortality, revolving life,
And greatness still revolving infinite ;
There littleness was not ; the least of things

Seem'd infinite ; and there his spirit shaped
Her prospects, nor did he believe,— he saw.
What wonder if his being thus became Sublime and comprehensive ? Low desires,
Low thoughts had there no place ; yet was his heart
Lowly ; for he was meek in gratitude,
Oft as he call'd those ecstasies to mind,
And whence they flow'd : and from them he acquired Wisdom, which works through patience ; thence he learn'd,
In many a calmer hour of sober thought,
To look on Nature with a humble heart,
Self-question'd where it did not understand,
And with a superstitious eye of love.

So pass'd the time ; yet to the nearest town
He duly went with what small overplus
His earnings might supply, and brought away
The book which most had tempted his desires
While at the stall he read. Among the hills
He gazed upon that mighty orb of song,
The divine Milton. Lore of different kind,
The annual savings of a toilsome life,
His stepfather supplied : books that explain
The purer elements of truth involved
In lines and numbers, and, by charm severe, (Especially perceived where nature droops
And feeling is suppress'd,) preserve the mind
Busy in solitude and poverty.
These occupations oftentimes deceived
The listless hours, while in the hollow vale,
Hollow and green, he lay on the green turf
In pensive idleness. What could he do
With blind endeavours, in that lonesome life,
Thus thirsting daily ? Yet still uppermost
Nature was at his heart as if he felt —
Though yet he knew not how — a wasting power

In all things which from her sweet influence
Might tend to wean him. Therefore with her hues,
Her forms, and with the spirit of her forms,
He clothed the nakedness of austere truth.
While yet he linger'd in the rudiments
Of science, and among her simplest laws,
His triangles — they were the stars of heaven,
The silent stars ! Oft did he take delight
To measure th' altitude of some tall crag
That is the eagle's birthplace, or some peak
Familiar with forgotten years, that shows
Inscribed, as with the silence of the thought,
Upon its bleak and visionary sides,
The history of many a winter storm, —
Or obscure records of the path of fire.

And thus, before his eighteenth year was told,
Accumulated feelings press'd his heart
With an increasing weight ; he was o'erpower'd
By Nature, by the turbulence subdued
Of his own mind ; by mystery and hope,
And the first virgin passion of a soul
Communing with the glorious universe.
Full often wish'd he that the winds might rage
When they were silent ; far more fondly now
Than in his earlier season did he love
Tempestuous nights — the conflict and the sounds
That live in darkness : — from his intellect
And from the stillness of abstracted thought
He ask'd repose ; and I have heard him say
That often, failing at this time to gain
The peace required, he scann'd the laws of light
Amid the roar of torrents, where they send
From hollow clefts up to the clearer air
A cloud of mist, which in the sunshine frames
A lasting tablet — for the observer's eye
Varying its rainbow hues. But vainly thus,

And vainly by all other means, he strove
To mitigate the fever of his heart.

In dreams, in study, and in ardent thought,
Thus, even from childhood upward, was he rear'd :
For intellectual progress wanting much,
Doutless, of needful help — yet gaining more ;
And every moral feeling of his soul
Strengthen'd and braced, by breathing in content
The keen, the wholesome air of poverty,
And drinking from the well of homely life.
But, from past liberty, and tried restraints,
He now was summon'd to select the course
Of humble industry that promised best
To yield him so unworthy maintenance.
The mother strove to make her son perceive
With what advantage he might teach a school
In the adjoining village ; but the youth,
Who of this service made a short essay,
Found that the wanderings of his thoughts were then
A misery to him ; that he must resign
A task he was unable to perform.

That stern yet kindly spirit who constrains
The Savoyard to quit his native rocks,
The free-born Swiss to leave his narrow vales (Spirit attach'd to regions mountainous Like their own steadfast clouds)— did now impel
His restless mind to look abroad with hope.
An irksome drudgery seems it to plod on,
Through dusty ways, in storm, from door to door,
A vagrant merchant bent beneath his load !
Yet do such travellers find their own delight ;
And their hard service, deem'd debasing now,
Gain'd merited respect in simpler times,
When squire, and priest, and they who round them dwelt
In rustic sequestration, all dependent

Upon the Pedlar's* toil — supplied their wants,
Or pleased their fancies, with the wares he brought.
Not ignorant was the youth that still no few
Of his adventurous countrymen were led
By perseverance in this track of life
To competence and ease ; to him it bore
Attractions manifold — and this he chose.
He ask'd his mother's blessing ; and with tears
Thanking his second father, ask'd from him
Paternal blessings. The good pair bestow'd
Their farewell benediction, but with hearts
Foreboding evil. From his native hills
He wander'd far : much did he see of men,
Their manners, their enjoyments, and pursuits,
Their passions, and their feelings ; chiefly those Essential and eternal in the heart,
Which 'mid the simpler forms of rural life,
Exist more simple in their elements,
And speak a plainer language. In the woods,
A lone enthusiast, and among the fields,
Itinerant in this labour, he had pass'd
The better portion of his time ; and there
Spontaneously had his affections thriven
Upon the bounties of the year, and felt
The liberty of Nature ; there he kept
In solitude and solitary thought
His mind in a just equipoise of love.
Serene it was, unclouded by the cares
Of ordinary life ; unvex'd, unwarp'd

* In conversation, Wordsworth is known to have frequently dwelt with pleasure on the wandering life of a Pedlar, and the opportunities it afforded for the study of human nature ; and in his writings he takes occasion to extol these wayfarers as a class, and to remark upon the high estimation in which they were formerly held. Dr. Davy informs us that a sister-in-law of Wordsworth's was brought up in the family of one who earned an independence by carrying a pack, and afterwards opened a shop

By partial bondage. In his steady course,
No piteous revolutions had he felt,
No wild varieties of joy and grief.
Unoccupied by sorrow of its own,
His heart lay open ; and, by Nature tuned
And constant disposition of his thoughts
To sympathy with man, he was alive
To all that was enjoy'd where'er he went ;
And all that was endured ; for in himself
Happy, and quiet in his cheerfulness,
He had no painful pressure from without
That made him turn aside from wretchedness
With coward fears. He could afford to suffer
With those whom he saw suffer. Hence it came
That in our best experience he was rich,
And in the wisdom of our daily life.
For hence, minutely, in his various rounds,
He had observed the progress and decay
Of many minds, of minds and bodies too ;
The history of many families ;
How they had prospered ; how they were o'erthrown
By passion or mischance ; or such misrule
Among the unthinking masters of the earth
As makes the nations groan. This active course,
Chosen in youth, through manhood he pursued,
Till due provision for his modest wants
Had been obtain'd ; and, thereupon, resolved
To pass the remnant of his days untask'd
With needless services, from hardship free.
His calling laid aside, he lived at ease :
But still he loved to pace the public roads
And the wild paths ; and, when the summer's warmth

in Kendal. He appears to have been a man of superior character and endowments, and the incidents of his life were of sufficient interest to lay hold of the imagination of the poet. For an amusing parallel between the knight-errant and the Pedlar, see the third paragraph of BOOK VIII.

Invited him, would often leave his home
And journey far, revisiting those scenes
That to his memory were most endear'd.
Vigorous in health, of hopeful spirits, untouch'd
By worldly-mindedness or anxious care ;
Observant, studious, thoughtful, and refresh'd
By knowledge gathered up from day to day ;—
Thus had he lived a long and innocent life.

The Scottish Church, both on himself and those With whom from childhood he grew up, had held
The strong hand of her purity ; and still
Had watch'd him with an unrelenting eye.
This he remember'd in his riper age
With gratitude, and reverential thoughts.
But by the native vigour of his mind,
By his habitual wanderings out of doors,
By loneliness, and goodness, and kind works,
Whate'er in docile childhood or in youth
He had imbibed of fear or darker thought,
Was melted all away : so true was this,
That sometimes his religion seem'd to me
Self-taught, as of a dreamer in the woods ;
Who to the model of his own pure heart
Framed his belief, as grace divine inspired,
Or human reason dictated with awe.
And surely never did there live on earth
A man of kindlier nature. The rough sports
And teasing ways of children vex'd not him ;
Nor could he bid them from his presence, tired
With questions and importunate demand.
Indulgent listener was he to the tongue
Of garrulous age ; nor did the sick man's tale,
To his fraternal sympathy address'd,
Obtain reluctant hearing.

Plain his garb,

Such as might suit a rustic sire prepared
For Sabbath duties ; yet he was a man
Whom no one could have pass'd without remark.
Active and nervous was his gait ; his limbs
And his whole figure breathed intelligence.
Time had compress'd the freshness of his cheek
Into a narrower circle of deep red ;
But had not tamed his eye, that under brows
Shaggy and grey, had meanings which it brought
From years of youth ; which, like a being made
Of many beings, he had wondrous skill
To blend with knowledge of the years to come,
Human, or such as lie beyond the grave.

So was he framed : and such his course of life,
Who now, with no appendage but a staff,
The prized memorial of relinquish'd toils,
Upon that cottage-bench reposed his limbs,
Screened from the sun. Supine the Wanderer lay,
His eyes as if in drowsiness half shut,
The shadows of the breezy elms above
Dappling his face. He had not heard my steps
As I approach'd, and near him did I stand
Unnoticed in the shade some minutes' space.
At length I hailed him, seeing that his hat
Was moist with water-drops, as if the brim
Had newly scoop'd a running stream. He rose,
And ere the pleasant greeting that ensued
Was ended, "'Tis," said I, "a burning day ;
My lips are parch'd with thirst, but you, I guess,
Have somewhere found relief." He, at the word,
Pointing towards a sweet-brier, bade me climb
The fence hard by, where that aspiring shrub
Look'd out upon the road. It was a plot
Of garden-ground run wild, its matted weeds
Marked with the steps of those, whom, as they pass'd,
The gooseberry-trees that shot in long lank slips,

Or currants hanging from their leafless stems
In scanty strings, had tempted to o'erleap
The broken wall. I look'd around, and there,
Where two tall hedge-rows of thick alder boughs
Join'd in a cold damp nook, espied a well
Shrouded with willow-flowers and plummy fern.
My thirst I slaked, and from the cheerless spot
Withdrawing, straightway to the shade return'd
Where sate the old man on the cottage bench ;
And while, beside him, with uncover'd head,
I yet was standing, freely to respire,
And cool my temples in the fanning air,
Thus did he speak : — “ I see around me here
Things which you cannot see : we die, my friend ;
Nor we alone, but that which each man loved
And prized in his peculiar nook of earth
Dies with him, or is changed ; and very soon
Even of the good is no memorial left.
The poets, in their elegies and songs
Lamenting the departed, call the groves,
They call upon the hills and streams to mourn.
And senseless rocks ; nor idly—for they speak,
In these their invocations, with a voice
Obedient to the strong creative power
Of human passion. Sympathies there are
More tranquil, yet perhaps of kindred birth,
That steal upon the meditative mind,
And grow with thought. Beside yon spring I stood,
And eyed its waters till we seem'd to feel
One sadness, they and I. For them a bond
Of brotherhood is broken : time has been
When, every day, the touch of human hand
Dislodged the natural sleep that binds them up
In mortal stillness ; and they minister'd
To human comfort. As I stoop'd to drink,
Upon the slimy foot-stone I espied
The useless fragment of a wooden bowl,

Green with the moss of years ; a pensive sight
That moved my heart, recalling former days,
When I could never pass that road but she
Who lived within these walls, at my approach,
A daughter's welcome gave me, and I loved her
As my own child. Oh ! sir, the good die first,
And they whose hearts are dry as summer dust
Burn to the socket. Many a passenger
Hath bless'd poor Margaret for her gentle looks,
When she upheld the cool refreshment drawn
From that forsaken spring ; and no one came
But he was welcome ; no one went away
But that it seem'd she loved him. She is dead,
The light extinguish'd of her lonely hut,
The hut itself abandon'd to decay,
And she forgotten in the quiet grave !

“ I speak,” continued he, “ of one whose stock
Of virtues bloom'd beneath this lowly roof.
She was a woman of a steady mind,
Tender and deep in her excess of love,
Not speaking much, pleased rather with the joy
Of her own thoughts : by some especial care
Her temper had been framed, as if to make
A being, who, by adding love to peace,
Might live on earth a life of happiness.
Her wedded partner lack'd not on his side,
The humble worth that satisfied her heart ;
Frugal, affectionate, sober, and withal
Keenly industrious. She with pride would tell
That he was often seated at his loom,
In summer, ere the mower was abroad
Among the dewy grass,—in early spring,
Ere the last star had vanish'd. They who pass'd
At evening, from behind the garden fence
Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply,
After his daily work, until the light

Had fail'd, and every leaf and flower were lost
In the dark hedges. So their days were spent
In peace and comfort ; and a pretty boy
Was their best hope,—next to the God in heaven.

“Not twenty years ago, but you, I think,
Can scarcely bear it now in mind, there came
Two blighted seasons when the fields were left
With half a harvest. It pleased heaven to add
A worse affliction in the plague of war ;
This happy land was stricken to the heart !
A wanderer then among the cottages,
I, with my freight of winter raiment, saw
The hardships of that season ; many rich
Sank down, as in a dream, among the poor ;
And of the poor did many cease to be,
And their place knew them not. Meanwhile abridged
Of daily comforts, gladly reconciled
To numerous self-denials, Margaret
Went struggling on through those calamitous years
With cheerful hope ; but ere the second autumn
Her life's true help-mate on a sick-bed lay
Smitten with perilous fever. In disease
He linger'd long ; and when his strength return'd,
He found the little he had stored, to meet
The hour of accident or crippling age,
Was all consumed. Two children had they now,
One newly born. As I have said, it was
A time of trouble : shoals of artisans
Were from their daily labour turn'd adrift
To seek their bread from public charity,
They, and their wives and children—happier far
Could they have lived as do the little birds
That peck along the hedges, or the kite
That makes his dwelling on the mountain rocks !

“A sad reverse it was for him who long

Had fill'd with plenty, and possess'd in peace,
This lonely cottage. At his door he stood,
And whistled many a snatch of merry tunes
That had no mirth in them : or with his knife
Carved uncouth figures on the heads of sticks ;
Then, not less idly, sought, through every nook
In house or garden, any casual work
Of use or ornament ; and with a strange,
Amusing, yet uneasy, novelty,
He blended, where he might, the various tasks
Of summer, autumn, winter, and of spring.
But this endured not ; his good-humour soon
Became a weight in which no pleasure was :
And poverty brought on a pettish mood
And a sore temper : day by day he droop'd,
And he would leave his work, and to the town
Without an errand, would direct his steps ;
Or wander here and there among the fields.
One while he would speak lightly of his babes,
And with a cruel tongue ; at other times
He toss'd them with a false unnatural joy :
And 'twas a rueful thing to see the looks
Of the poor innocent children. 'Every smile,'
Said Margaret to me here beneath these trees,
'Made my heart bleed.'"

At this the Wanderer paused ;
And, looking up to those enormous elms,
He said, "'Tis now the hour of deepest noon.
At this still season of repose and peace,
This hour, when all things which are not at rest
Are cheerful ; while this multitude of flies
Is filling all the air with melody ;
Why should a tear be in an old man's eye ?
Why should we thus, with an untoward mind,
And in the weakness of humanity,
From natural wisdom turn our hearts away ;

To natural comfort shut our eyes and ears,
And feeding on disquiet, thus disturb
The calm of nature with our restless thoughts ?”

He spake with somewhat of a solemn tone :
But, when he ended, there was in his face
Such easy cheerfulness, a look so mild,
That for a little time it stole away
All recollection ; and that simple tale
Pass'd from my mind like a forgotten sound.
A while on trivial things we held discourse,
To me soon tasteless. In my own despite,
I thought of that poor woman as of one
Whom I had known and loved. He had rehearsed
Her homely tale with such familiar power,
With such an active countenance, an eye
So busy, that the things of which he spake
Seem'd present ; and, attention now relax'd,
There was a heart-felt chillness in my veins.
I rose ; and, turning from the breezy shade,
Went forth into the open air, and stood
To drink the comfort of the warmer sun.
Long time I had not stay'd, ere, looking round
Upon that tranquil ruin, I return'd,
And begg'd of the old man that, for my sake,
He would resume his story.

He replied,
“ It were a wantonness, and would demand
Severe reproof, if we were men whose hearts
Could hold vain dalliance with the misery
Even of the dead ; contented thence to draw
A momentary pleasure, never mark'd
By reason, barren of all future good.
But we have known that there is often found
In mournful thoughts, and always might be found,
A power to virtue friendly : were't not so, *

I am a dreamer among men, indeed
An idle dreamer ! 'Tis a common tale,
An ordinary sorrow of man's life,
A tale of silent suffering, hardly clothed
In bodily form.—But, without further bidding,
I will proceed.

“ While thus it fared with them,
To whom this cottage, till those hapless years,
Had been a blessed home, it was my chance
To travel in a country far remote ;
And glad I was, when, halting by yon gate
That leads from the green lane, once more I saw
These lofty elm-trees. Long I did not rest :
With many pleasant thoughts I cheer'd my way
O'er the flat common. Having reach'd the door,
I knock'd ; and when I entered with the hope
Of usual greeting, Margaret look'd at me
A little while ; then turn'd her head away
Speechless ; and, sitting down upon a chair,
Wept bitterly. I wist not what to do,
Or how to speak to her. Poor wretch ! at last
She rose from off her seat, and then,—O sir !
I cannot tell how she pronounced my name.
With fervent love, and with a face of grief
Unutterably helpless, and a look
That seem'd to cling upon me, she inquired
If I had seen her husband. As she spake,
A strange surprise and fear came to my heart,
Nor had I power to answer ere she told
That he had disappear'd—not two months gone,
He left his house ; two wretched days had pass'd,
And on the third, as wistfully she raised
Her head from off her pillow, to look forth,
Like one in trouble, for returning light,
Within her chamber casement she espied
A folded paper, lying as if placed

To meet her waking eyes. This tremblingly
She open'd—found no writing, but therein
Pieces of money carefully inclosed,
Silver and gold—'I shudder'd at the sight,
Said Margaret, 'for I knew it was his hand
Which placed it there ; and, ere that day was ended,
That long and anxious day ! I learn'd from one
Sent hither by my husband to impart
The heavy news, that he had join'd a troop
Of soldiers, going to a distant land.
—He left me thus—he could not gather heart
To take a farewell of me ; for he fear'd
That I should follow with my babes, and sink
Beneath the misery of that wandering life.'

“ This tale did Margaret tell with many tears ;
And, when she ended, I had little power
To give her comfort, and was glad to take Such words of hope from her own mouth as served
To cheer us both ; but long we had not talk'd,
Ere we built up a pile of better thoughts,
And with a brighter eye she look'd around
As if she had been shedding tears of joy.
We parted. 'Twas the time of early spring ;
I left her busy with her garden tools ;
And well remember, o'er that fence she look'd,
And, while I paced along the footway-path,
Call'd out, and sent a blessing after me,
With tender cheerfulness ; and with a voice
That seem'd the very sound of happy thoughts.

“ I roved o'er many a hill and many a dale,
With my accusom'd load ; in heat and cold,
Through many a wood, and many an open ground ;
In sunshine and in shade, in wet or fair,
Drooping or blithe of heart, as might befall ;
My best companions now the driving winds,

And now the 'trotting brooks' and whispering trees,
And now the music of my own sad steps,
With many short-lived thought that pass'd between,
And disappear'd. I journeyed back this way
Towards the wane of summer ; when the wheat
Was yellow ; and the soft and bladed grass,
Springing afresh, had o'er the hayfield spread
Its tender verdure. At the door arrived,
I found that she was absent. In the shade,
Where now we sit, I waited her return.
Her cottage, then a cheerful object, wore
Its customary look,—only, I thought,
The honeysuckle, crowding round the porch,
Hung down in heavier tufts ; and that bright weed,
The yellow stone-crop, suffer'd to take root
Along the window's edge, profusely grew,
Blinding the lower panes. I turn'd aside,
And stroll'd into her garden. It appear'd
To lag behind the season, and had lost
Its pride of neatness. From the border lines,
Composed of daisy and resplendent thrift,
Flowers straggling forth had on those paths encroach'd,
Which they were used to deck : carnations, once
Prized for surpassing beauty, and no less
For the peculiar pains they had required,
Declined their languid heads without support.
The cumbrous bind-weed, with its wreaths and bells,
Had twined about her two small rows of peas,
And dragg'd them to the earth. Ere this an hour
Was wasted. Back I turn'd my restless steps,
A stranger pass'd ; and, guessing whom I sought,
He said that she was used to ramble far.
The sun was sinking in the west ; and now
I sate with sad impatience. From within
Her solitary infant cried aloud,
Then, like a blast that dies away self-still'd,
The voice was silent. From the bench I rose ;

But neither could divert nor soothe my thoughts.
The spot, though fair, was very desolate—
The longer I remain'd, more desolate.
And, looking round, I saw the corner stones,
Till then unnoticed, on either side the door
With dull red stains discolour'd, and stuck o'er
With tufts and hairs of wool, as if the sheep,
That fed upon the common, thither came
Familiarly ; and found a couching-place
Even at her threshold. Deeper shadows fell
From these tall elms ; the cottage-clock struck eight ;
I turn'd, and saw her distant a few steps.
Her face was pale and thin, her figure too
Was changed. As she unlock'd the door, she said,
' It grieves me you have waited here so long,
But, in good truth, I've wander'd much of late,
And, sometimes—to my shame I speak—have need
Of my best prayers to bring me back again.'
While on the board she spread our evening meal,
She told me—interrupting not the work
Which gave employment to her listless hands—
That she had parted with her elder child,
To a kind master on a distant farm
Now happily apprenticed—' I perceive
You look at me, and you have cause ; to-day
I have been travelling far ; and many days
About the fields I wander, knowing this
Only, that what I seek I cannot find ;
And so I waste my time : for I am changed ;
And to myself,' said she, ' have done much wrong
And to this helpless infant. I have slept
Weeping, and weeping have I waked ; my tears
Have flow'd as if my body were not such
As others are ; and I could never die.
But I am now in mind and in my heart
More easy ; and I hope,' said she, ' that Heaven
Will give me patience to endure the things

Which I behold at home.' It would have grieved
Your very soul to see her ; Sir, I feel
The story linger in my heart : I fear
'Tis long and tedious ; but my spirit clings
To that poor woman : so familiarly
Do I perceive her manner, and her look,
And presence ; and so deeply do I feel
Her goodness, that, not seldom, in my walks
A momentary trance comes over me ;
And to myself I seem to muse on one
By sorrow laid asleep, or borne away ;
A human being destined to awake
To human life, or something very near
To human life, when he shall come again
For whom she suffer'd. Yes, it would have grieved
Your very soul to see her : evermore
Her eyelids droop'd, her eyes were downward cast ;
And, when she at her table gave me food,
She did not look at me. Her voice was low,
Her body was subdued. In every act
Pertaining to her house affairs, appear'd
The careless stillness of a thinking mind
Self-occupied ; to which all outward things
Are like an idle matter. Still she sigh'd,
But yet no motion of the breast was seen,
No heaving of the heart. While by the fire
We sate together, sighs came on my ear,
I knew not how, and hardly whence they came.

“ Ere my departure to her care I gave,
For her son's use, some tokens of regard,
Which with a look of welcome she received ;
And I exhorted her to have her trust
In God's good love, and seek his help by prayer.
I took my staff, and when I kiss'd her babe,
The tears stood in her eyes. I left her then
With the best hope and comfort I could give.

She thank'd me for my wish ; but for my hope
It seem'd she did not thank me.

“ I returned,
And took my rounds along this road again
Ere on its sunny bank the primrose flower
Peep'd forth, to give an earnest of the spring.
I found her sad and drooping ; she had learn'd
No tidings of her husband ; if he lived,
She knew not that he lived ; if he were dead,
She knew not he was dead. She seem'd the same
In person and appearance ; but her house
Bespake a sleepy hand of negligence.
The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
Was comfortless, and her small lot of books,
Which in the cottage window, heretofore
Had been piled up against the corner panes
In seemly order, now, with straggling leaves
Lay scatter'd here and there, open or shut
As they had chanced to fall. Her infant babe
Had from its mother caught the trick of grief,
And sigh'd among its playthings. Once again
I turn'd towards the garden gate, and saw,
More plainly still, that poverty and grief
Were now come nearer to her : weeds defaced
The harden'd soil, and knots of wither'd grass ;
No ridges there appear'd of clear black mould,
No winter greenness ; of her herbs and flowers.
It seem'd the better part were gnaw'd away
Or trampled into earth ; a chain of straw,
Which had been twined about the slender stem
Of a young apple-tree, lay at its root ;
The bark was nibbled round by truant sheep.
—Margaret stood near, her infant in her arms,
And, noting that my eye was on the tree,
She said, ‘ I fear it will be dead and gone
Ere Robert come again.’ Towards the house
Together we return'd, and she inquired

If I had any hope :—but for her babe,
And for her little orphan boy, she said,
She had no wish to live—that she must die
Of sorrow. Yet I saw the idle loom
Still in its place ; his Sunday garments hung
Upon the self-same nail ; his very staff
Stood undisturb'd behind the door. And when,
In bleak December, I retraced this way,
She told me that her little babe was dead,
And she was left alone. She now, released
From her maternal cares, had taken up
The employment common through these wilds, and
By spinning hemp a pittance for herself ; [gain'd
And for this end had hired a neighbour's boy
To give her needful help. That very time
Most willingly she put her work aside,
And walk'd with me along the miry road
Heedless how far ; and, in such piteous sort
That any heart had ached to hear her, begg'd
That, wheresoe'er I went, I still would ask
For him whom she had lost. We parted then—
Our final parting ; for from that time forth
Did many seasons pass ere I return'd
Into this tract again.

“ Nine tedious years
From their first separation, nine long years,
She linger'd in unquiet widowhood ;
A wife and widow. Needs must it have been
A sore heart-wasting ! I have heard, my friend,
That in yon arbour oftentimes she sate
Alone, through half the vacant Sabbath day,
And if a dog pass'd by, she still would quit
The shade, and look abroad. On this old bench
For hours she sate ; and evermore her eye
Was busy in the distance, shaping things
That made her heart beat quick. You see that path,
Now faint,—the grass has crept o'er its grey line ;

There, to and fro, she paced through many a day
Of the warm summer, from a belt of hemp
That girt her waist, spinning the long drawn thread
With backward steps. Yet ever as there pass'd
A man whose garments show'd the soldier's red,
Or crippled mendicant in sailor's garb,
The little child who sate to turn the wheel
Ceased from his task ; and she with falt'ring voice
Made many a fond inquiry ; and when they,
Whose presence gave no comfort, were gone by,
Her heart was still more sad. And by yon gate,
That bars the traveller's road, she often stood,
And when a stranger horseman came, the latch
Would lift, and in his face look wistfully ;
Most happy, if, from aught discover'd there
Of tender feeling, she might dare repeat
The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor hut
Sank to decay : for he was gone whose hand,
At the first nipping of October frost,
Closed up each chink, and with fresh bands of straw
Chequer'd the green-grown thatch. And so she lived
Through the long winter, reckless and alone ;
Until her house by frost, and thaw, and rain,
Was sapp'd ; and while she slept, the nightly damps
Did chill her breast ; and in the stormy day
Her tatter'd clothes were ruffled by the wind ;
Even at the side of her own fire. Yet still
She loved this wretched spot, nor would for worlds
Have parted hence : and still that length of road,
And this rude bench, one torturing hope endear'd,
Fast rooted at her heart : and here, my friend,—
In sickness she remain'd ; and here she died,
Last human tenant of these ruin'd walls !”

The old man ceased : he saw that I was moved ;
From that low bench, rising instinctively,
I turn'd aside in weakness, nor had power

To thank him for the tale which he had told.
I stood, and leaning o'er the garden wall,
Review'd that woman's sufferings ; and it seem'd
To comfort me, while, with a brother's love,
I bless'd her in the impotence of grief.
At length towards the cottage I return'd
Fondly,—and traced, with interest more mild,
That secret spirit of humanity
Which, 'mid the calm oblivious tendencies
Of Nature, 'mid her plants, and weeds, and flowers,
And silent overgrowings, still survived.
The old man, noting this, resum'd, and said,
“ My friend, enough to sorrow you have given,
The purposes of wisdom ask no more :
Be wise and cheerful ; and no longer read
The forms of things with an unworthy eye.
She sleeps in the calm earth, and peace is here.
I well remember that those very plumes,
Those weeds, and the high spear-grass on that wall,
By mist and silent raindrops silver'd o'er,
As once I pass'd, did to my heart convey
So still an image of tranquillity,
So calm and still, and look'd so beautiful
Amid the uneasy thoughts which fill'd my mind,
That what we feel of sorrow and despair
From ruin and from change, and all the grief
That passing shows of being leave behind,
Appear'd an idle dream, that could not live
Where meditation was. I turn'd away,
And walk'd along my road in happiness.”

He ceased. Ere long the sun declining shot
A slant and mellow radiance, which began
To fall upon us, while beneath the trees,
We sate on that low bench : and now we felt,
Admonish'd thus, the sweet hour coming on.
A linnet warbled from those lofty elms,

A thrush sang loud, and other melodies,
 At distance heard, peopled the milder air.
 The old man rose, and, with a sprightly mein
 Of hopeful preparation, grasp'd his staff;
 Together casting then a farewell look
 Upon those silent walls, we left the shade;
 And, ere the stars were visible, had reach'd
 A village inn,—our evening resting-place.

THE SOLITARY.

The Author describes his travels with the Wanderer, whose character is further illustrated—Morning scene, and view of a Village Wake—Wanderer's account of a friend whom he purposes to visit—View, from an eminence, of the valley which his friend had chosen for his retreat—Sound of singing from below—a funeral procession—Descent into the valley—Observations drawn from the Wanderer at sight of a book accidentally discovered in a recess in the valley—Meeting with the Wanderer's friend, the Solitary—Wanderer's description of the mode of burial in this mountainous district—Solitary contrasts with this, that of the individual carried a few minutes before from the cottage—The cottage entered—Description of the Solitary's apartment—Repast there—View from the window, of two mountain summits—and the Solitary's description of the companionship they afford him—Account of the departed inmate of the cottage—Description of a grand spectacle upon the mountains, with its effect upon the Solitary's mind—Quit the house.

In days of yore how fortunately fared
 The minstrel ! wandering on from hall to hall,
 Baronial court or royal ; cheer'd with gifts
 Munificent, and love, and ladies' praise ;

Now meeting on his road an armèd knight,
Now resting with a pilgrim by the side
Of a clear brook ; beneath an abbey's roof
One evening sumptuously lodged ; the next
Humbly in a religious hospital ;
Or with some merry outlaws of the wood ;
Or haply shrouded in a hermit's cell.
Him, sleeping or awake, the robber spared ;
He walk'd protected from the sword of war,
By virtue of that sacred instrument,
His harp, suspended at the traveller's side :
His dear companion wheresoe'er he went,
Opening from land to land an easy way
By melody, and by the charm of verse.
Yet not the noblest of that honour'd race
Drew happier, loftier, more impassion'd thoughts
From his long journeyings and eventful life,
Than this obscure itinerant (an obscure
But a high-soul'd and tender-hearted man)
Had skill to draw from many a ramble, far
And wide protracted through the tamer ground
Of these our unimagined days ;
Both while he trod the earth in humblest guise
Accoutered with his burden and his staff ;
And now, when free to move with lighter pace.

What wonder, then, if I, whose favorite school
Hath been the fields, the roads, and rural lanes,
Look'd on this guide with reverential love !
Each with the other pleased, we now pursued
Our journey—beneath favourable skies.
Turn wheresoe'er we would, he was a light
Unfailing : not a hamlet could we pass,
Rarely a house, which did not yield to him
Remembrances ; or from his tongue call forth
Some way-beguiling tale. Nor less regard
Accompanied those strains of apt discourse,

Which Nature's various objects might supply;
And in the silence of his face I read
His overflowing spirit. Birds and beasts,
And the mute fish that glances in the stream,
And harmless reptile coiling in the sun,
And gorgeous insect hovering in the air,
The fowl domestic, and the household dog—
In his capacious mind he loved them all :
Their rights acknowledging, he felt for all.
Oft was occasion given me to perceive
How the calm pleasures of the pasturing herd
To happy contemplation soothed his walk
Along the field, and in the shady grove ;
How the poor brute's condition, forced to run
Its course of suffering in the public road,
Sad contrast ! all too often smote his heart
With unavailing pity. Rich in love
And sweet humanity, he was, himself,
To the degree that he desired, beloved.
Greetings and smiles we met with all day long,
From faces that we knew ; we took our seats
By many a cottage-hearth, where he received
The welcome of an inmate from afar.
Nor was he loth to enter ragged huts,
Wherein his charity was bless'd ; his voice
Heard as the voice of an experienced friend.
And, sometimes—where the poor man held dispute
With his own mind, unable to subdue
Impatience, through inaptness to perceive
General distress in his particular lot :
Or cherishing resentment, or in vain
Struggling against it, with a soul perplex'd,
And finding in itself no steady power
To draw the line of comfort that divides
Calamity, the chastisement of Heaven,
From the injustice of our brother men—
To him appeal was made as to a judge ;

Who, with an understanding heart, allay'd
The perturbation ; listen'd to the plea ;
Resolved the dubious point ; and sentence gave,
So grounded, so applied, that it was heard
With soften'd spirit—even when it condemn'd.

Such intercourse I witness'd while we roved
Now as his choice directed, now as mine ;
Or both, with equal readiness of will ;
Our course submitting to the changeful breeze
Of accident. But when the rising sun
Had three times call'd us to renew our walk,
My fellow-traveller said, with earnest voice,
As if the thought were but a moment old,
That I must yield myself without reserve
To his disposal. Glad was I of this.
We started,—and he led me towards the hills ;
Up through an ample vale, with higher hills
Before us, mountains stern and desolate ;
But in the majesty of distance now
Set off, and to our ken appearing fair
Of aspect, with aerial softness clad,
And beautified with morning's purple beams.

The wealthy, the luxurious, by the stress
Of business roused, or pleasure, ere their time,
May roll in chariots, or provoke the hoofs
Of the fleet coursers they bestride, to raise
From earth the dust of morning, slow to rise ;
And they, if blest with health and hearts at ease,
Shall lack not their enjoyment : but how faint
Compared with ours, who, pacing side by side,
Could, with an eye of leisure, look on all
That we beheld ; and lend the listening sense
To every grateful sound of earth and air—
Pausing at will ; our spirits braced, our thoughts
Pleasant as roses in the thickets blown,

And pure as dew bathing their crimson leaves.

Mount slowly, sun ! and may our journey lie
Awhile within the shadow of this hill,
This friendly hill, a shelter from thy beams !
Such is the summer pilgrim's frequent wish :
And as that wish, with prevalence of thanks
For present good o'er fear of future ill,
Stole in among the morning's blither thoughts,
'Twas chased away, for tow'rd the western side
Of the broad vale casting a casual glance,
We saw a throng of people—wherefore met ?
Blithe notes of music, suddenly let loose
On the thrill'd ear, did to the question yield
Prompt answer ; they proclaim the annual wake,
Which the bright season favours. Tabor and pipe
In purpose join to hasten and reprove
The laggard rustic ; and repay with boons
Of merriment a particolour'd knot,
Already form'd upon the village green.
Beyond the limits of the shadow cast
By the broad hill, glisten'd upon our sight
That gay assemblage. Round them and above,
Glitter, with dark recesses interposed,
Casement, and cottage roof, and stems of trees
Half-veil'd in vapoury cloud, silver steam
Of dews fast melting on their leafy boughs
By the strong sunbeams smitten. Like a mast
Of gold, the maypole shines ; as if the rays
Of morning, aided by exhaling dew,
With gladsome influence could reanimate
The faded garlands dangling from its sides.

Said I, " The music and the sprightly scene
Invite us ; shall we quit our road, and join
These festive matins ? " He replied, " Not loth
Here would I linger, and with you partake,

Not one hour merely, but till evening's close,
 The simple pastimes of the day and place.
 By the fleet racers, ere the sun be set,
 The turf of yon large pasture will be skimm'd ;
 There, too, the lusty wrestlers will contend ;
 But know we not that he who intermits
 Th' appointed task and duties of the day,
 Untunes full oft the pleasures of the day,
 Checking the finer spirits that refuse
 To flow when purposes are lightly changed ?
 We must proceed, a length of journey yet
 Remains untraced." Then, pointing with his staff
 Towards those craggy summits, his intent
 He thus imparted :—

“ In a spot that lies
 Among yon mountain fastnesses conceal'd,
 You will receive, before the hour of noon,
 Good recompense, I hope, for this day's toil—
 From sight of one who lives secluded there.
 Lonesome and lost : of whom, and whose past life (Not to forestall such knowledge as may be More faithfully collected from himself),
 This brief communication shall suffice.

“ Though now sojourning there, he, like myself,
 Sprang from a stock of lowly parentage
 Among the wilds of Scotland ; in a tract
 Where many a shelter'd and well-tended plant,
 Upon the humblest ground of social life,
 Doth at this day, I trust, the blossoms bear
 Of piety and simple innocence.
 Such grateful promises his youth display'd ;
 And, he show'd in study forward zeal,
 All helps were sought, all measures strain'd, that he
 By due scholastic discipline prepared,
 Might to the ministry be call'd ; which done,
 Partly through lack of better hopes—and part,

Perhaps, incited by a curious mind
In early life he undertook the charge
Of chaplain to a military troop
Cheer'd by the Highland bagpipe, as they march'd
In plaided vest—his fellow-countrymen.
This office filling, and by native power,
And force of native inclination, made
An intellectual ruler in the haunts
Of social vanity, he walk'd the world,
Gay, and affecting graceful gaiety ;
Lax, buoyant—less a pastor with his flock
Than a soldier among soldiers—lived and roam'd
Where fortune led : and Fortune, who oft proves
The careless wanderer's friend, to him made known
A blooming lady—a conspicuous flower,
Admired for beauty, for her sweetness praised,
Whom he had sensibility to love,
Ambition to attempt, and skill to win.

“ For this fair bride, most rich in gifts of mind,
Nor sparingly endow'd with worldly wealth,
His office he relinquish'd ; and retired
From the world's notice to a rural home.
Youth's season yet with him was scarcely past,
And she was in youth's prime. How full their joy —
How free their love !—nor did their love decay,
Nor joy abate, till,—pitiable doom !
In the short course of one undreaded year
Death blasted all. Death suddenly o'erthrew
Two lovely children—all that they possess'd !
The mother follow'd : miserably bare
The one survivor stood ; he wept, he pray'd
For his dismissal, day and night—compell'd
By pain to turn his thoughts towards the grave,
And face the regions of eternity.
An uncomplaining apathy displaced
This anguish ; and, indifferent to delight,

To aim and purpose, he consumed his days,
To private interest dead, and public care.
So lived he ; so he might have died.

“ But now,
To the wide world's astonishment, appear'd
The glorious opening, the unlook'd-for dawn,
That promised everlasting joy to France !
That sudden light had power to pierce the gloom
In which his spirit, friendless upon earth,
In separation dwelt, and solitude.
The voice of social transport reach'd even him !
He broke from his contracted bounds, repair'd
To the great city, an emporium then
Of golden expectations, and receiving
Freights, every day, from a new world of hope.
Thither his popular talents he transferr'd !
And, from the pulpit, zealously maintain'd
The cause of Christ and civil liberty,
As one, and moving to one glorious end.
Intoxicating service ! I might say
A happy service ; for he was sincere
As vanity and fondness for applause,
And new and shapeless wishes, would allow.

“ That righteous cause of freedom did, we know,
Combine for one hostility, as friends,
Ethereal natures and the worst of slaves :
Was served by rival advocates that came
From regions opposite as heaven and hell.
One courage seem'd to animate them all :
And from the dazzling conquests daily gain'd
By their united efforts, there arose
A proud and most presumptuous confidence
In the transcendent wisdom of the age,
And its discernment ; not alone in rights,
And in the origin and bounds of power
Social and temporal : but in laws divine,

Deduced by reason, or to faith reveal'd.
An overweening trust was raised ; and fear
Cast out, alike of person and of thing.
Plague from this union spread, whose subtle bane
The strongest did not easily escape ;
And he, what wonder ? took a mortal taint.
How shall I trace the change, how bear to tell
That he broke faith with them whom he had laid
In earth's dark chambers with a Christian's hope !
An infidel contempt of holy writ
Stole by degrees upon his mind ; and hence
Life, like that Roman Janus, double-faced ;
Vilest hypocrisy, the laughing, gay
Hypocrisy, not leagued with fear, but pride.
Smooth words he had to wheedle simple souls ;
But, for disciples of the inner school,
Old freedom was old servitude, and they
The wisest whose opinions stoop'd the least
To know restraints, and who most boldly drew
Hopeful prognostications from a creed,
Which, in the light of false philosophy,
Spread like a halo round a misty moon,
Widening its circle as the storms advance.

“ His sacred function was at length renounced
And every day and every place enjoy'd
The unshackled layman's natural liberty ;
Speech, manners, morals, and all without disguise,
I do not wish to wrong him ; though the course
Of private life licentiously display'd
Unhallow'd actions—planted like a crown
Upon the insolent aspiring brow
Of spurious notions—worn as open signs
Of prejudice subdued—he still retain'd,
'Mid much abasement, what he had received
From nature—an intense and glowing mind.
Wherefore, when humbled Liberty grew weak

And mortal sickness on her face appear'd,
He colour'd objects to his own desire
As with a lover's passion. Yet his moods
Of pain were keen as those of better men,
Nay, keener, as his fortitude was less :
And he continued, when worse days were come,
To deal about his sparkling eloquence,
Struggling against the strange reverse with zeal
That shew'd like happiness; but, in despite
Of all this outside bravery, within
He neither felt encouragement nor hope :
For moral dignity and strength of mind
Were wanting, and simplicity of life,
And reverence for himself; and, last and best,
Confiding thoughts, through love and fear of Him,
Before whose sight the troubles of this world
Are vain as billows in a tossing sea.

“The glory of the times fading away —
The splendour, which had given a festal air
To self-importance, hallow'd it, and veil'd
From his own sight, this gone, therewith he lost
All joy in human nature; was consumed,
And vex'd, and chafed, by levity and scorn,
And fruitless indignation; gall'd by pride;
Made desperate by contempt of men who throve
Before his sight in power or fame, and won,
Without desert, what he desired; weak men,
Too weak even for his envy or his hate!
And thus beset, and finding in himself
Nor pleasure nor tranquility, at last,
After a wandering course of discontent
In foreign lands, and inwardly oppress'd
With malady — in part, I fear, provoked
By weariness of life — he fix'd his home,
Or, rather say, sate down by very chance,
Among these rugged hills; where now he dwells,

And wastes the sad remainder of his hours
In self-indulgent spleen, that doth not want
Its own voluptuousness — on this resolved,
With this content — that he will live and die
Forgotten, — at safe distance from ‘a world
Not moving to his mind.’”

These serious words

Closed the preparatory notices
With which my fellow-traveller had beguiled
The way, while we advanced up that wide vale.
Now, suddenly diverging, he began
To climb, upon its western side, a ridge,
Pathless and smooth, a long and steep ascent ;
As if the object of his quest had been
Some secret of the mountains, cavern, fall
Of water, or some boastful eminence
Renown'd for splendid prospect far and wide.
We clomb without a tract to guide our steps,
And, on the summit, reach'd a healthy plain,
With a tumultuous waste of huge hill-tops
Before us ; savage region ! and I walk'd
In weariness ; when, all at once, behold !
Beneath our feet, a little lowly vale,
A lowly vale, and yet uplifted high
Among the mountains ; even as if the spot
Had been, from eldest time, by wish of theirs
So placed, — to be shut out from all the world !
Urn-like it was in shape, deep as an urn ;
With rocks encompass'd, save that to the south
Was one small opening, where a heath-clad ridge
Supplied a boundary less abrupt and close.
A quiet treeless nook, with two green fields,
A liquid pool, that glitter'd in the sun,
And one bare dwelling ; one abode, no more !
It seem'd the home of poverty and toil,
Though not of want : the little fields, made green
By husbandry of many thrifty years,

Paid cheerful tribute to the moorland house.
There crows the cock, single in his domain :
The small birds find in spring no thicket there
To shroud them ; only from the neighbouring vales
The cuckoo, straggling up to the hill-tops,
Shouteth faint tidings of some gladder place.

“ Ah ! what a sweet recess,” thought I, “ is here ! ”
Instantly throwing down my limbs at ease
Upon a bed of heath — “ full many a spot
Of hidden beauty have I chanced t’ espy
Among the mountains ; never one like this ;
So lonesome, and so perfectly secure :
Not melancholy — no, for it is green,
And bright, and fertile, furnish’d in itself
With the few needful things that life requires.
In rugged arms how soft it seems to lie,
How tenderly protected ! Far and near
We have an image of the pristine earth,
The planet in its nakedness ; were this
Man’s only dwelling, sole appointed seat,
First, last, and single, in the breathing world,
It could not be more quiet : peace is here
Or nowhere ; days unruffled by the gale
Of public news or private ; years that pass
Forgetfully ; uncall’d upon to pay
The common penalties of mortal life,
Sickness, or accident, or grief, or pain.”

On these and other kindred thoughts intent,
In silence by my comrade’s side I lay,
He also silent : when, from out the heart
Of that profound abyss, a solemn voice,
Or several voices in one solemn sound,
Was heard ascending ; mournful, deep, and slow
The cadence, as of psalms — a funeral dirge !
We listen’d, looking down towards the hut,

But seeing no one : meanwhile from below
The strain continued, spiritual as before ;
And now distinctly could I recognize
These words :—“ *Shall in the grave thy love be known,
In death thy faithfulness ?* ” “ God rest his soul ! ”
The Wand’rer cried, abruptly breaking silence ;
“ He is departed, and finds peace at last ! ”

This scarcely spoken, and those holy strains
Not ceasing, forth appear’d in view a band
Of rustic persons from behind the hut,
Bearing a coffin in the midst, with which
They shaped their course along the sloping side
Of that small valley, singing as they moved ;
A sober company and few, the men
Bareheaded, and all decently attired.
Some steps when they had thus advanced, the dirge
Ended ; and, from the stillness that ensued
Recovering, to my friend I said, “ You spake,
Methought, with apprehension that these rites
Are paid to him upon whose shy retreat
This day we purposed to intrude.” “ I did so ;
But let us hence, that we may learn the truth.
Perhaps it is not he, but some one else,
For whom this pious service is perform’d ;
Some other tenant of the solitude.”

So, to a steep and difficult descent
Trusting ourselves, we wound from crag to crag,
Where passage could be won ; and, as the last
Of the mute train upon the heathy top
Of that off-sloping outlet disappear’d,
I, more impatient in the course I took,
Had landed upon easy ground, and there
Stood waiting for my comrade. When, behold
An object that enticed my steps aside !
It was an entry, narrow as a door,

A passage whose brief windings open'd out
Into a platform, that lay, sheepfold-wise,
Enclosed between a single mass of rock
And one old moss-grown wall ; a cool recess,
And fanciful ! For, where the rock and wall
Met in an angle, hung a tiny roof,
Or penthouse, which most quaintly had been framed
By thrusting two rude sticks into the wall
And overlaying them with mountain sods ;
To weather-fend a little turf-built seat,
Whereon a full-grown man might rest, nor dread
The burning sunshine, or a transient shower ;
But the whole plainly wrought by children's hands !
Whose simple skill had throng'd the grassy floor
With work of frame less solid, a proud show
Of baby-houses, curiously arranged ;
Nor wanting ornament of walks between,
With mimic trees inserted in the turf,
And gardens interposed. Pleased with the sight,
I could not choose but beckon to my guide,
Who, having enter'd, carelessly look'd round,
And now would have pass'd on, when I exclaim'd,
“ Lo ! what is here ? ” and, stooping down, drew forth
A book, that, in the midst of stones and moss,
And wreck of particolour'd earthenware,
Aptly disposed, had lent its help to raise
One of those pretty structures. “ Gracious Heaven ! ”
The Wanderer cried, “ it cannot but be his,
And he is gone ! ” The book, which in my hand
Had open'd of itself, (for it was swoln
With searching damp, and seemingly had lain
To th' injurious elements exposed
From week to week,) I found to be a work
In the French tongue, a novel of Voltaire,
His famous “ Optimist.” “ Unhappy man ! ”
Exclaim'd my friend ; “ here, then, has been to him
Retreat within retreat, a sheltering-place

Within how deep a shelter ! He had fits,
Even to the last, of genuine tenderness,
And loved the haunts of children ; here, no doubt,
He sometimes play'd with them ; and here hath sate
Far oft'ner by himself. This book, I guess,
Hath been forgotten in his careless way,
Left here when he was occupied in mind,
And by the cottage children has been found.
Heaven bless them, and their inconsiderate work ;
To what odd purpose have the darlings turn'd
This sad memorial of their hapless friend ! ”

“ Me,” said I, “ most doth it surprise, to find Such book in such a place ! ” “ A book it is,”
He answer'd, “ to the person suited well,
Though little suited to surrounding things ;
Nor, with the knowledge which my mind possess'd,
Could I behold it undisturb'd : 'tis strange,
I grant, and stranger still had been to see
The man who was its owner dwelling here
With one poor shepherd, far from all the world !
Now, if our errand hath been thrown away,
As from these intimations I forbode,
Grieved shall I be — less for my sake than yours,
And least of all for him who is no more. ”

By this, the book was in the old man's hand :
And he continued, glancing on the leaves
An eye of scorn : — “ The lover,” said he, “ doom'd
To love when hope hath fail'd him, whom no depth
Of privacy is deep enough to hide,
Hath yet his bracelet or his lock of hair,
And that is joy to him. When change of times
Hath summon'd kings to scaffolds, do but give
The faithful servant, who must hide his head
Henceforth in whatsoever nook he may,
A kerchief sprinkled with his master's blood,

And he too hath his comforter. How poor
Beyond all poverty, how destitute,
Must that man have been left, who, hither driven,
Flying or seeking, could yet bring with him
No dearer relic, and no better stay,
Than this dull product of a scoffer's pen,
Impure conceits discharging from the heart
Harden'd by impious pride ! I did not fear
To tax you with this journey," mildly said
My venerable friend, as forth we stepp'd
Into the presence of the cheerful light ;
" For I have knowledge that you do not shrink
From moving spectacles ; but let us on. "
So speaking, on he went, and at the word
I follow'd, till he made a sudden stand ;
For full in view, approaching through the gate,
That open'd from the inclosure of green fields
Into the rough uncultivated ground,
Behold the man whom he had fancied dead !
I knew, from the appearance and the dress,
That it could be no other : a pale face,
A tall and meagre person, in a garb
Not rustic, — dull and faded like himself !
He saw us not, though distant but few steps ;
For he was busy dealing from a store,
Which on a leaf he carried on his hand,
Strings of ripe currants ; gift by which he strove,
With intermixture of endearing words,
To soothe a child who walked beside him, weeping
As if disconsolate. " They to the grave
Are bearing him, my little one," he said—
" To the dark pit, but he will feel no pain ;
His body is at rest, his soul in heaven. "

Glad was my comrade now, though he at first,
I doubt not, had been more surprised than glad.
But now, recover'd from the shock, and calm,

He soberly advanced, and to the man
Gave cordial greeting. Vivid was the light
Which flash'd at this from out the other's eyes ;
He was all fire ; the sickness from his face
Pass'd like a fancy that is swept away.
Hands join'd he with his visitant, — a grasp,
An eager grasp ; and, many moments' space,
When the first glow of pleasure was no more,
And much of what had vanish'd was return'd,
An amicable smile retain'd the life,
Which it had unexpectedly received,
Upon his hollow cheek. "How kind," he said ;
"Nor could your coming have been better timed ;
For this, you see, is in our narrow world
A day of sorrow. I have here a charge"—
And, speaking thus, he patted tenderly
The sunburnt forehead of the weeping child—
"A little mourner, whom it is my task
To comfort ; but how came ye ? If yon track
(Which doth at once befriend us and betray)
Conducted hither your most welcome feet,
Ye could not miss the funeral train ; they yet
Have scarcely disappear'd." "This blooming child,"
Said the old man, "is of an age to weep
At any grave or solemn spectacle ;
Inly distress'd, or overpower'd with awe,
He knows not why ; but he, perchance, this day
Is shedding orphan's tears ; and you yourself
Must have sustain'd a loss." "The hand of Death,"
He answer'd, "has been here ; but could not well
Have fallen more lightly, if it had not fallen
Upon myself." The other left these words
Unnoticed, thus continuing :—

"From yon crag,
Down whose steep sides we dropp'd into the vale,
We heard the hymn they sang—a solemn sound
Heard anywhere, but in a place like this

'Tis more than human ! Many precious rites
And customs of our rural ancestry
Are gone, or stealing from us ; this, I hope,
Will last for ever. Oft have I stopp'd
When on my way, I could not choose but stop,
So much I felt the awfulness of life,
In that one moment when the corse is lifted
In silence, with a hush of decency,
Then from the threshold moves with songs of peace,
And confidential yearnings, to its home,
Its final home in earth. What traveller — who (How far soe'er a stranger) does not own
The bond of brotherhood, when he sees them go,
A mute procession, on the houseless road,
Or passing by some single tenement
Or cluster'd dwellings, where again they raise
The monitory voice ? But most of all
It touches, it confirms, and elevates,
Then, when the body, soon to be consign'd
Ashes to ashes, dust bequeath'd to dust,
Is raised from the church-aisle, and forward borne
Upon the shoulders of the next in love,
The nearest in affection or in blood ;
Yea, by the very mourners who had knelt
Beside the coffin, resting on its lid
In silent grief their unuplifted heads,
And heard meanwhile the Psalmist's mournful plaint,
And that most awful scripture which declares
We shall not sleep, but we shall all be changed !
Have I not seen ? — ye likewise may have seen
Son, husband, brothers — brothers side by side,
And son and father, also side by side,
Rise from that posture ; and in concert move,
On the green turf following the vested priest,
Four dear supporters of one senseless weight,
From which they do not shrink, and under which They faint not, but advance towards the grave

Step after step — together with their firm
Unhidden faces ; he that suffers most,
He outwardly, and inwardly, perhaps,
The most serene, with most undaunted eye ;
Oh ! blest are they who live and die like these,
Loved with such love, and with such sorrow mourn'd !

“ That poor man taken hence to-day,” replied
The solitary, with a faint sarcastic smile,
Which did not please me, “ must be deem'd, I fear,
Of the unblest ; for he will surely sink
Into his mother earth without such pomp
Of grief, depart without occasion given
By him for such array of fortitude,
Full seventy winters hath he lived — and mark !
This simple child will mourn his one short hour,
And I shall miss him ; scanty tribute ! yet,
This wanting, he would leave the sight of men,
If love were his sole claim upon their care,
Like a ripe date which in the desert falls
Without a hand to gather it.” At this
I interposed, though loath to speak, and said,
“ Can it be thus, among so small a band
As ye must needs be here ? In such a place
I would not willingly, methinks, lose sight
Of a departing cloud.” “ 'Twas not for love,” Answer'd the sick man, with a careless voice,
“ That I came hither ; neither have I found,
Among associates who have power of speech,
Nor in such other converse as is here,
Temptation so prevailing as to change
That mood, or undermine my first resolve.”
Then, speaking in like careless sort, he said
To my benign companion, — “ Pity 'tis
That fortune did not guide you to this house
A few days earlier ; then would you have seen
What stuff the dwellers in this solitude

(That seems by Nature framed to be the seat
And very bosom of pure innocence)
Are made of ; an ungracious matter this !
Which, for truth's sake, yet in remembrance, too,
Of past discussions with this zealous friend
And advocate of humble life, I now
Will force upon his notice undeterr'd
By the example of his own pure course,
And that respect and deference which a soul
May fairly claim, by niggard age enrich'd
In what it values most — the love of God
And His frail creature man ; but ye shall hear.
I talk — and ye are standing in the sun
Without refreshment !”

Saying this he led

Towards the cottage : homely was the spot,
And to my feeling, ere we reach'd the door,
Had almost a forbidding nakedness ;
Less fair, I grant, even painfully less fair,
Than it appear'd when from the valley's brink
We had look'd down upon it. All within,
As left by the departed company,
Was silent ; and the solitary clock
Tick'd, as I thought, with melancholy sound.
Following our guide, we clomb the cottage stairs
And reach'd a small apartment dark and low,
Which was no sooner enter'd than our host
Said gaily, “This is my domain, my cell,
My hermitage, my cabin — what you will ;
I love it better than a snail his house.
But now ye shall be feasted with our best.”
So, with more ardour than an unripe girl
Left one day mistress of her mother's stores,
He went about his hospitable task.
My eyes were busy, and my thoughts no less ;
And pleased I look'd upon my grey-hair'd friend,
As if to thank him ; he return'd that look,

Cheer'd plainly, and yet serious. What a wreck
We had around us ! scatter'd was the floor,
And, in like sort, chair, window-seat, and shelf,
With books, maps, fossils, wither'd plants and flowers,
And tufts of mountain moss ; and here and there,
Lay, intermix'd with these, mechanic tools,
And scraps of paper, — some I could perceive
Scribbled with verse : a broken angling-rod
And shatter'd telescope, together link'd
By cobwebs, stood within a dusty nook ;
And instruments of music, some half-made,
Some in disgrace, hung dangling from the walls.
But speedily the promise was fulfill'd ;
A feast before us, and a courteous host
Inviting us in glee to sit and eat.
A napkin, white as foam of that rough brook
By which it had been bleach'd, o'erspread the board ;
And was itself half-cover'd with a load
Of dainties, — oaten bread, curds, cheese, and cream,
And cakes of butter curiously emboss'd,
Butter that had imbibed a golden tinge,
A hue like that of yellow meadow flowers
Faintly reflected in a silent pool.
Nor lack'd, for more delight on that warm day,
Our table small parade of garden fruits,
And whortle-berries from the mountain-sides.
The child, who long ere this had still'd his sobs,
Was now a help to his late comforter,
And moved, a willing page, as he was bid,
Ministering to our need.

In genial mood,

While at our pastoral banquet thus we sate
Fronting the window of that little cell,
I could not ever and anon forbear
To glance an upward look on two huge peaks,
That from some other vale peer'd into this.
“Those lusty twins, on which your eyes are cast,”

✓ Exclaim'd our host, "if here you dwelt, would be
 Your prized companions. Many are the notes
 Which, in his tuneful course, the wind draws forth
 From rocks, woods, caverns, heaths, and dashing shores;
 And well those lofty brethren bear their part
 In the wild concert — chiefly when the storm
 Rides high ; then all the upper air they fill
 With roaring sound, that ceases not to flow
 Like smoke along the level of the blast,
 In mighty current ; theirs, too, is the song
 Of stream and headlong flood that seldom fails ;
 And, in the grim and breathless hour of noon,
 Methinks that I have heard them echo back
 The thunder's greeting : nor have Nature's laws
 Left them ungifted with a power to yield
 Music of finer tone ; a harmony,
 So do I call it, though it be the hand
 Of silence, — though there be no voice ; the clouds,
 The mist, the shadows, light of golden suns,
 Motions of moonlight, all come thither — touch,
 And have an answer — thither come, and shape
 A language not unwelcome to sick hearts
 And idle spirits : there the sun himself,
 At the calm close of summer's longest day,
 Rests his substantial orb ; between those heights,
 And on the top of either pinnacle,
 More keenly than elsewhere in night's blue vault,
 Sparkle the stars, as of their station proud.
 Thoughts are not busier in the mind of man
 Than the mute agents stirring there : — alone
 ✓ Here do I sit and watch."

With bright'ning face
 The Wanderer heard him speaking thus, and said,
 "Now for the tale with which you threaten'd us !"
 "In truth the threat escaped me unawares,
 And was forgotten. Let this challenge stand
 For my excuse, if what I shall relate

Tire your attention. Outcast and cut off
As we seem here, and must have seem'd to you
When ye look'd down upon us from the crag,
Islanders of a stormy mountain sea,
We are not so ; perpetually we touch
Upon the vulgar ordinance of the world,
And he, whom this our cottage hath to-day
Relinquish'd, was dependent for his bread
Upon the laws of public charity.
The housewife, tempted by such slender gains
As might from that occasion be distill'd,
Open'd, as she before had done for me,
Her doors, t' admit this homeless pensioner ;
The portion gave of course but wholesome fare
Which appetite required — a blind dull nook
Such as she had, the kenel of his rest !
This, in itself not ill, would yet have been Ill borne in earlier life : but his was now
The still contentedness of seventy years,
Calm did he sit beneath the wide-spread tree
Of his old age ; and yet less calm and meek,
Winningly meek or venerably calm,
Than slow and torpid ; paying in this wise
A penalty, if penalty it were,
For spendthrift feats, excesses of his prime.
I loved the old man for I pitied him.
A task it was, I own, to hold discourse
With one so slow in gathering up his thoughts,
But he was a cheap pleasure to my eyes ;
Mild, inoffensive, ready in his way,
And useful to his utmost power : and there
Our housewife knew full well what she possess'd ;
He was her vassal of all labour, till'd
Her garden, from the pasture fetch'd her kine ;
And, one among the orderly array
Of haymakers, beneath the burning sun
Maintain'd his place ; or heedfully pursued

His course, on errands bound to other vales,
Leading sometimes an inexperienced child
Too young for any profitable task.
So moved he like a shadow that perform'd
Substantial service. Mark me now, and learn
For what reward. The moon her monthly round
Hath not completed since our dame, the queen
Of this one cottage and this lonely dale,
Into my little sanctuary rush'd,—
Voice to a rueful treble humanized,
And features in deplorable dismay :
I treat the matter lightly, but alas !
It is most serious. From mid-noon the rain
Had fallen in torrents ; all the mountain-tops
Were hidden, and black vapours coursed their sides ;
This had I seen, and saw ; but, till she spake,
Was wholly ignorant that my ancient friend —
Who at her bidding, early and alone,
Had clomb aloft to delve the moorland turf
For winter fuel, to his noontide meal
Came not, and now perchance upon the heights
Lay at the mercy of this raging storm.
' Inhuman ! ' said I ; ' was an old man's life
Not worthy the trouble of a thought — alas !
This notice comes to late.' With joy I saw
Her husband enter from a distant vale.
We sallied forth together ; found the tools
Which the neglected veteran had dropp'd,
But through all quarters look'd for him in vain.
We shouted — but no answer ! Darkness fell
Without remission of the blast or shower,
And fears for own safety drove us home. our
I, who weep little, did, I will confess,
The moment I was seated here alone,
Honour my little cell with some few tears
Which anger and resentment could not dry.
All night the storm endured ; and, soon as help

Had been collected from the neighbouring vale,
With morning we renew'd our quest : the wind
Was fall'n, the rain abated, but the hills
Lay shrouded in impenetrable mist ;
And long and hopelessly we sought in vain,
Till, chancing on that lofty ridge to pass
A heap of ruin, almost without walls
And wholly without roof (in ancient time
It was a chapel, a small edifice,
In which the peasants of these lonely dells
For worship met upon that central height) —
Chancing to pass this wreck of stones, we there
Espied at last the object of our search,
Couch'd in a nook, and seemingly alive.
It would have moved you, had you seen the guise
In which he occupied his chosen bed,
Lying full three parts buried among tufts
Of heath-plant under and above him strown,
To baffle, as he might, the watery storm :
And there we found him breathing peaceably ;
Snug as a child that hides itself in sport
'Mid a green haycock in a sunny field.
We spake — he made reply, but would not stir
At our entreaty ; less from want of power
Than apprehension and bewildering thoughts.
So was he lifted gently from the ground,
And with their freight the shepherds homeward moved
Through the dull mist, I following — when a step,
A single step, that freed me from the skirts
Of the blind vapour, open'd to my view
Glory beyond all glory ever seen
By waking sense or by the dreaming soul !
Though I am conscious that no power of words
Can body forth, no hues of speech can paint
That gorgeous spectacle — too bright and fair
Even for remembrance ; yet the attempt may give Collateral interest to this homely tale.

The appearance, instantaneously disclosed,
Was of a mighty city — boldly say
A wilderness of building — sinking far
And self-withdrawn into a boundless depth,
Far sinking into splendour — without end !
Fabric it seem'd of diamond and of gold,
With alabaster domes and silver spires :
And blazing terrace upon terrace, high
Uplifted ; here serene pavillions bright,
In avenues disposed ; there, towers begirt
With battlements, that on their restless fronts
Bore stars — illumination of all gems !
By earthly nature had the effect been wrought
Upon the dark materials of the storm
Now pacified ; on them, and on the coves
And mountain-steeps and summits, whereunto
The vapours had receded, taking there
Their station under a cerulean sky.
Oh, 'twas an unimaginable sight !
Clouds, mists, streams, watery rocks, and emerald turf,
Clouds of all tincture, rocks and sapphire sky,
Confused commingled, mutually inflamed,
Molten together, and composing thus,
Each lost in each, that marvellous array
Of temple, palace, citadel, and huge
Fantastic pomp of structure without name,
In fleecy folds voluminous enwrapp'd.
Right in the midst, where interspace appear'd
Of open court, an object like a throne
Under a shining canopy of state
Stood fix'd ; and fix'd resemblances were seen
To implements of ordinary use,
But vast in size, in substance glorified ;
Such as by Hebrew prophets were beheld
In visions — forms uncouth of mightiest power,
For admiration and mysterious awe.
Below me was the earth ; this little vale,

Lay low beneath my feet ; 'twas visible —
I saw not, but I felt, that it was there.
That which I saw was the reveal'd abode
Of spirits in beatitude : my heart
Swell'd in my breast. 'I have been dead,' I cried,
'And now I live ! Oh ! wherefore do I live ?'
And with that pang I prayed to be no more !
But I forget our charge — as utterly
I then forgot him — there I stood and gazed ;
The apparition faded not away,
And I descended. Having reach'd the house,
I found its rescued inmate safely lodged,
And in serene possession of himself,
Beside a genial fire that seem'd to spread
A gleam of comfort o'er his pallid face.
Great show of joy the housewife made, and truly
Was glad to find her conscience set at ease ;
And not less glad, for sake of her good name,
That the poor sufferer had escaped with life.
But, though he seem'd at first to have received
No harm, and, uncomplaining as before,
Went through his usual tasks, a silent change
Soon shew'd itself ; he linger'd three short weeks ;
And from the cottage hath been borne to-day.

“So ends my dolorous tale, and glad I am
That it is ended.” At these words he turn'd —
And, with blithe air of open fellowship,
Brought from the cupboard wine and stouter cheer,
Like one who would be merry. Seeing this
My grey-friend said courteously — “Nay, nay,
You have regaled us as a hermit ought ;
Now let us forth into the sun !” Our host
Rose, though reluctantly, and forth we went.

DESPONDENCY.

Images in the Valley — Another recess in it entered and described — Wanderer's sensations — Solitary's excited by the same objects — Contrast between these — Despondency of the Solitary gently reprov'd — Conversation exhibiting the Solitary's past and present opinions and feelings, till he enters upon his own history at length — His domestic felicity — Afflictions — Dejection — Roused by the French Revolution — Disappointment and disgust — Voyage to America — Disappointment and disgust pursue him — His return — His languor and depression of mind, from want of faith in the great truths of religion, and want of confidence in the virtue of mankind.

A HUMMING bee — a little tinkling rill —
A pair of falcons wheeling on the wing,
In clamorous agitation, round the crest
Of a tall rock, their airy citadel —
By each and all of these the pensive ear
Was greeted, in the silence that ensued,
When through the cottage threshold we had pass'd,
And, deep within that lonesome valley, stood
Once more beneath the concave of the blue
And cloudless sky. Anon, exclaim'd our host,
Triumphantly dispersing with the taunt
The shade of discontent which on his brow
Had gather'd, — "Ye have left my cell — but see
Now Nature hems you in with friendly arms!
And by her help ye are my prisoners still.
But which way shall I lead you? — how contrive,
In spot so parsimoniously endow'd,
That the brief hours which yet remain may reap
Some recompence of knowledge or delight?"
So saying, round he look'd, as if perplex'd;

And, to remove those doubts, my grey-hair'd friend
Said — "Shall we take this pathway for our guide? —
Upwards it winds, as if, in summer heats,
Its lines had first been fashion'd by the flock
A place of refuge seeking at the root
Of yon black yew-tree, whose protruded boughs
Darken the silver bosom of the crag
From which it draws its meagre sustenance.
There in commodious shelter may we rest.
Or let us trace this streamlet to its source ;
Feebly it tinkles with an earthy sound,
And a few steps may bring us to the spot
Where, haply, crown'd with flow'rets and green herbs,
The mountain infant to the sun comes forth,
Like human life from darkness." At the word
We follow'd where he led. A sudden turn
Through a straight passage of encumber'd ground,
Proved that such hope was vain : for now we stood
Shut out from prospect of the open vale,
And saw the water that composed this rill,
Descending, disembodied, and diffused
O'er the smooth surface of an ample crag,
Lofty, and steep, and naked as a tower.
All further progress here was barr'd. "And who,"
Thought I, "if master of a vacant hour,
Here would not linger, willingly detain'd?
Whether to such wild objects he were led
When copious rains have magnified the stream
Into a loud and white-robed waterfall,
Or introduced at this more quiet time."

Upon a semicirque of turf-clad ground,*

* These lines have been quoted ad nauseum as descriptive of the Bowder Stone in Borrowdale. That singular fragment, if it resembles a ship, rests on its keel, or narrow edge ; whereas, the stone here described, lies "with keel upturned." Miss Martineau, with her usual keenness, notices this mistake of the guide books.

The hidden nook discover'd to our view
A mass of rock, resembling, as it lay
Right at the foot of that moist precipice,
A stranded ship, with keel upturn'd, — that rests
Fearless of winds and waves. Three several stones Stood near of smaller size, and not unlike
To monumental pillars : and, from these
Some little space disjoined, a pair were seen,
That with united shoulders bore aloft
A fragment, like an altar, flat and smooth.
Barren the tablet, yet thereon appear'd,
Conspicuously station'd, one fair plant,
A tall and shining holly, that had found
A hospitable chink, and stood upright,
As if inserted by some human hand
In mockery, to wither in the sun,
Or lay its beauty flat before a breeze,
The first that enter'd. But no breeze did now
Find entrance ; high or low appear'd no trace
Of motion, save the water that descended,
Diffused adown that barrier of steep rock,
And softly creeping, like a breath of air,
Such as is sometimes seen, and hardly seen,
To brush the still breast of a crystal lake.

“ Behold a cabinet for sages built,
Which kings might envy ! ” Praise to this effect
Broke from the happy old man's reverend lips ;
Who to the Solitary turn'd, and said,
“ In sooth, with love's familiar privilege,
You have decried, in no unseemly terms
Of modesty, that wealth which is your own.
Among these rocks and stones, methinks, I see
More than the heedless impress that belongs
To lonely nature's casual work ; they bear
A semblance strange of power intelligent,
And of design not wholly worn away.

Boldest of plants that ever faced the wind,
 How gracefully that slender shrub looks forth
 From its fantastic birthplace ! And I own,*
 Some shadowy intimations haunt me here,
 I cannot but incline to a belief
 That in these shows a chronicle survives
 Of purposes akin to those of man,
 But wrought with mightier arm than now prevails.
 Voiceless the stream descends into the gulf
 With timid lapse ; and lo ! while in this strait
 I stand — the chasm of the sky above my head
 Is heaven's profoundest azure ; no domain
 For fickle, short-lived clouds to occupy,
 Or to pass through, but rather an abyss
 In which the everlasting stars abide ;
 And whose soft gloom and boundless depth might tempt
 The curious eye to look for them by day.
 Hail contemplation ! from the stately towers,
 Rear'd by th' industrious hand of human art
 To lift thee high above the misty air,
 And turbulence of murmuring cities vast ;
 From academic groves, that have for thee
 Been planted, hither come and find a lodge
 To which thou mayest resort for holier peace, —
 From whose calm centre thou, through height or depth,
 Mayest penetrate, wherever truth shall lead ;
 Measuring through all degrees ~~under~~ the scale until
 Of time and conscious nature disappear,
 Lost in unsearchable eternity !”

* Wordsworth loved to second nature in these her fantastic moods : he would, for instance, pluck holly berries and invite some friend to accompany him on to the neighbouring fell on a planting expedition. There, clambering among the highest rocks, he would drop the berries in such nooks and crannies as he deemed nature would have chosen, saying, “I do this for posterity. Some people are selfish enough to say, what has posterity done for me ? but the past does much for us all !”

A pause ensued ; and with minuter care
We scann'd the various features of the scene :
And soon the tenant of that lonely vale
With courteous voice thus spake :—

“ I should have grieved
Hereafter — should perhaps have blamed myself —
If from my poor retirement ye had gone
Leaving this nook unvisited ; but, in sooth,
Your unexpected presence had so roused
My spirits, that they were bent on enterprise ;
And, like an ardent hunter, I forgot,
Or, shall I say — disdain'd — the game that lurk'd
At my own door. The shapes before our eyes,
And their arrangement, doubtless must be deem'd
The sport of Nature, aided by blind Chance,
Rudely to mock the works of toiling man.
And hence, this upright shaft of unhewn stone,
From fancy, willing to set off her stores
By sounding titles, hath acquired the name
Of Pompey's Pillar ; that I gravely style
My Theban obelisk ; and, there, behold
A Druid cromlech ! — thus I entertain
The antiquarian humour, and am pleased
To skim along the surfaces of things,
Beguiling harmlessly the listless hours.
But if the spirit be oppress'd by sense
Of instability, revolt, decay,
And change, and emptiness, these freaks of Nature
And her blind helper Chance, do then suffice
To quicken, and to aggravate, to feed
Pity and scorn, and melancholy pride,
Not less than that huge pile (from some abyss
Of mortal power unquestionably sprung)
Whose hoary diadem of pendant rocks
Confines the shrill-voiced whirlwind, round and round
Eddying within its vast circumference,
On Sarum's naked plain — than pyramid

Of Egypt, unsubverted, undissolved ;*
Or Syria's marble ruins towering high
Above the sandy desert, in the light
Of sun or moon. Forgive me, if I say
That an appearance, which hath raised your minds
To an exalted pitch (the self-same cause Different effect producing) is for me
Fraught rather with depression than delight,
Though shame it were, could I not look around me,
By the reflection of your pleasure pleased.
Yet happier, in my judgement, even than you,
With your bright transports, fairly may be deem'd,
Is he (if such have ever entered here)
The wandering herbalist,—who, clear alike
From vain, and that worse evil, vexing thoughts,
Casts on these uncouth forms a slight regard
Of transitory interest, and peeps round
For some rare flow'ret of the hills, or plant
Of craggy fountain ; what he hopes for, wins,
Or learns, at least, that 'tis not to be won :
Then, keen and eager, as a fine-nosed hound
By soul-engrossing instinct driven along
Through wood or open field, the harmless man
Departs, intent upon his onward quest !
Nor is that fellow-wanderer, so deem I,
Less to be envied (you may trace him oft

* The reader will not be displeased to compare this passage with the opening lines of Granger's "Ode on Solitude."

"O Solitude, romantick maid,
Whether by nodding towers you tread ;
Or haunt the desarts trackless gloom,
Or hover o'er the yawning tomb ;
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide ;
Or, starting from your half-year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep :
Or, at the purple dawn of day,
Tadmor's marble wastes survey."

By scars which his activity has left
Beside our roads and pathways, though, thank Heaven !
This covert nook reports not of his hand,)
He, who with pocket-hammer smites the edge
Of every luckless rock or stone that stands
Before his sight, by weather-stains disguised,
Or crusted o'er with vegetation thin,
Nature's first growth — detaching by the stroke
A chip or splinter to resolve his doubts —
And, with that ready answer satisfied,
Doth to the substance give some barbarous name,
Then hurries on ; or from the fragments picks
His specimen, if haply intervein'd
With sparkling mineral, or should crystal tube
Be lodged therein—and thinks himself enrich'd,
Wealthier, and doubtless wiser, than before !
Intrusted safely each to his pursuit,
This earnest pair may range from hill to hill,
And, if it please them, speed from clime to clime ;
The mind is full—no pain is in their sport."

"Then," said I, interposing, "one is near
Who cannot but possess in your esteem
Place worthier still of envy. May I name,
Without offence, that fair-faced cottage-boy—
Dame Nature's pupil of the lowest form—
Youngest apprentice in the school of art ?
Him, as we enter'd from the open glen,
You might have noticed, busily engaged—
Heart, soul, and hands,—in mending the defects
Left in the fabric of a leaky dam,
Framed for enabling this penurious stream
To turn a slender mill (that new-made plaything)
For his delight—the happiest he of all !"

"Far happiest," answer'd the desponding man,
"If, such as now he is, he might remain !"

Ah ! what avails imagination high
 Or question deep ? What profits all that earth,
 Or heaven's blue vault, is suffer'd to put forth
 Of impulse or allurements, for the soul
 To quit the beaten track of life, and soar
 Far as she finds a yielding element
 In past or future ; far as she can go
 Through time or space—if neither in the one,
 Nor in the other region, nor in aught
 That fancy, dreaming o'er the map of things,
 Hath placed beyond these penetrable bounds,
 Words of assurance can be heard—if nowhere
 A habitation, for consummate good,
 Or for progressive virtue, by the search
 Can be attain'd, a better sanctuary
 From doubt and sorrow, than the senseless grave ? ”

“ Is this,” the grey-hair'd wanderer mildly said,
 “ The voice which we so lately overhead
 To that same child addressing tenderly
 The consolations of a hopeful mind ?
‘ His body is at rest—his soul in heaven.’
 These were your words ; and, verily, methinks
 Wisdom is oftentimes nearer when we stoop
 Than when we soar.”

The other, not displeased,
 Promptly replied :—“ My notion is the same ;
 And I, without reluctance, could decline
 All act of inquisition whence we rise,
 And what, when breath hath ceased, we may become.
 Here are we, in a bright and breathing world !
 Our origin, what matters it ? In lack
 Of worthier explanation, say at once
 With the American (a thought which suits
 The place where now we stand) that certain men
 Leapt out together from a rocky cave ;
 And these were the first parents of mankind :

Or, if a different image be recall'd
By the warm sunshine, and the jocund voice
Of insects chirping out their careless lives
On these soft beds of thyme-besprinkled turf,
Choose, with the gay Athenian, a conceit
As sound—with that blithe race who wore erewhile
Their golden grasshoppers, in sign that they
Had sprung from out the soil whereon they dwelt.
But stop!—these theoretic fancies jar
On serious minds; for doubtless, in one sense,
The theme is serious; then, as Hindoos draw
Their holy Ganges, from a skiey fount,
Even so deduce the stream of human life
From seats of power divine; and hope, or trust,
That our existence winds her stately course
Beneath the sun, like Ganges, to make part
Of a living ocean; or, if such may seem
Its tendency, to be engulf'd and lost
Like Niger, in impenetrable sands
And utter darkness; thought which may be faced,
Though comfortless! Not of myself I speak;
Such acquiescence neither doth imply,
In me, a meekly-bending spirit, soothed
By natural piety; nor a lofty mind,
By philosophic discipline prepared
For calm subjection to acknowledged law;
Pleased to have been, contented not to be.
Such palms I boast not; no! to me, who find,
Reviewing my past way, much to condemn,
Little to praise, and nothing to regret,
(Save some remembrances of dream-like joys
That scarcely seem to have belong'd to me,)
If I must take my choice between the pair
That rule alternately the weary hours,
Night is than day more acceptable; sleep
Doth, in my estimate of good, appear
A better state than waking; death than sleep.

Feelingly sweet is stillness after storm,
Though under covert of the wormy ground!

“Yet be it said, in justice to myself,
That in more genial times, when I was free
To explore the destiny of human kind;
Not as an intellectual game pursued
With curious subtilty, thereby to cheat
Irrksome sensations; but by love of truth
Urged on, or haply by intense delight
In feeding thought, wherever thought could feed;
I did not rank with those (too dull or nice,
For to my judgement such they then appear'd,
Or to aspiring, thankless at the best)
Who, in this frame of human life, perceive
An object whereunto their souls are tied
In discontented wedlock; nor did e'er,
From me, those dark, impervious shades, that hang
Upon the region whither we are bound,
Exclude a power to enjoy the vital beams
Of present sunshine. Deities that float
On wings—angelic spirits! I could muse
O'er what from eldest time we have been told
Of your bright forms and glorious faculties,
And with the imagination be content,
Not wishing more; repining not to tread
The little sinuous path of earthly care,
By flowers embellish'd, and by springs refresh'd.
'Blow, winds of autumn!—let your chilling breath
Take the live herbage from the mead, and strip
The shady forest of its green attire,—
And let the bursting clouds to fury rouse
The gentle brooks! Your desolating sway,'
Thus I exclaim'd, 'no sadness sheds on me;
And no disorder in your rage I find.
What dignity, what beauty, in this change
From mild to angry, and from sad to gay,

Alternate and revolving ! How benign,
How rich in animation and delight,
How bountiful these elements—compared
With aught, as more desirable and fair,
Devised by fancy for the golden age :
Or the perpetual warbling that prevails
In Arcady, beneath unalter'd skies,
Through the long year in constant quiet bound,
Night hush'd as night, and day serene as day !'
But why this tedious record ? Age we know
Is garrulous ; and solitude is apt
To anticipate the privilege of age.
From far ye come ; and surely with a hope
Of better entertainment—let us hence !”

Loath to forsake the spot, and still more loath
To be diverted from our present theme,
I said, “ My thoughts, agreeing, sir, with yours,
Would push this censure farther : for, if smiles
Of scornful pity be the just reward
Of poesy, thus courteously employ'd
In framing models to improve the scheme
Of man's existence, and recast the world,
Why should not grave Philosophy be styled,
Herself, a dreamer of a kindred stock,
A dreamer yet more spiritless and dull ?
“ Yes,” said I, “ shall the immunities to which She doth lay claim, the precepts she bestows,
Establish sounder titles of esteem
For her, who (all too timid and reserved
For onset, for resistance too inert,
Too weak for suffering and for hope too tame)
Did place in flow'ry gardens curtain'd round
With world-excluding groves, the brotherhood
Of soft Epicureans, taught,—if they
The ends of being would secure, and win
The crown of wisdom—to yield up their souls

To a voluptuous unconcern, preferring
Tranquillity to all things. Or is she,"
I cried, "more worthy of regard—the power,
Who, for the sake of sterner quiet, closed
The Stoic's heart against the vain approach
Of admiration, and all sense of joy?"

His countenance gave notice that my zeal
Accorded little with his present mind ;
I ceased, and he resumed, "Ah ! gentle sir,
Slight if you will, the means ; but spare to slight
The end of those, who did, by system, rank,
As the prime object of a wise man's aim,
Security from shock of accident,
Release from fear ; and cherish'd peaceful days
For their own sakes, as mortal life's chief good,
And only reasonable felicity.
What motive drew, what impulse, I would ask,
Through a long course of later ages, drove
The hermit to his cell in forest wide ;
Or what detain'd him, till his closing eyes
Took their last farewell of the sun and stars,
Fast anchor'd in the desert ? Not alone
Dread of the persecuting sword,—remorse,
Wrongs unredress'd, or insults unavenged
And unavengeable, defeated pride,
Prosperity subverted, maddening want,
Friendship betray'd, affection unreturn'd,
Love with despair or grief in agony :
Not always from intolerable pangs
He fled ; but, compass'd round by pleasure, sigh'd
For independent happiness ; craving peace,
The central feeling of all happiness.
Not as a refuge from distress or pain,
A breathing-time, vacation, or a truce,
But for its absolute self ; a life of peace,
Stability without regret or fear ;

That hath been, is, and shall be evermore !
Such the reward he sought ; and wore out life,
There, where on few external things his heart
Was set, and those his own ; or, if not his,
Subsisting under Nature's steadfast law.

“ What other yearning was the master tie
Of the monastic brotherhood ; upon rock
Aërial, or in green secluded vale,
One after one, collected from afar,
An undissolving fellowship ? What but this,
The universal instinct of repose—
The longing for confirm'd tranquillity,
Inward and outward—humble yet sublime :
The life where hope and memory are as one ;
Earth quiet and unchanged ; the human soul
Consistent in self-rule ; and heaven reveal'd
To meditation in that quietness !—
Such was their scheme : thrice happy he who gain'd
The end proposed ! And—though the same were miss'd
By multitudes, perhaps obtain'd by none—
They, for the attempt, and for the pains employ'd,
Do, in my present censure, stand redeem'd
From the unqualified disdain, that once
Would have been cast upon them by my voice
Delivering its decisions from the seat
Of forward youth, that scruples not to solve
Doubts, and determine questions, by the rules
Of inexperienced judgement, ever prone
To overweening faith, and is inflamed
By courage, to demand from real life
The test of act, and suffering to provoke
Hostility—how dreadful when it comes,
Whether affliction be the foe, or guilt !

“ A child of earth, I rested, in that stage
Of my past course to which these thoughts advert,

Upon earth's native energies ; forgetting
That mine was a condition which required
Nor energy, nor fortitude—a calm
Without vicissitude ; which, if the like
Had been presented to my view elsewhere,
I might have even been tempted to despise.
But that which was serene was also bright ;
Enliven'd happiness with joy o'erflowing,
With joy, and—oh ! that memory should survive
To speak the word—with rapture ! Nature's boon,
Life's genuine inspiration, happiness
Above what rules can teach, or fancy feign ;
Abused, as all possessions are abused
That are not prized according to their worth.
And yet, what worth ?—what good is given to men,
More solid than the gilded clouds of heaven,
What joy more lasting than a vernal flower ?
None ! 'tis the general plaint of human kind
In solitude ; and mutually address'd
From each to all, for wisdom's sake : this truth
The priest announces from his holy seat ;
And crown'd with garlands in the summer grove,
The poet fits it to his pensive lyre.
Yet, ere that final resting place be gain'd,
Sharp contradictions hourly shall arise
To cross the way ; and we, perchance, by doom
Of this same life, shall be compell'd to grieve
That the prosperities of love and joy
Should be permitted, oftentimes, to endure
So long, and be at once cast down for ever.
Oh ! tremble ye to whom hath been assign'd
A course of days composing happy months,
And they as happy years ; the present still
So like the past, and both so firm a pledge
Of a congenial future, that the wheels
Of pleasure move without the aid of hope,
For mutability is Nature's bane ;

And slighted Hope will be avenged ; and, when Ye need her favours, ye shall find her not ;
But, in her stead, fear—doubt—and agony !”

This was the bitter language of the heart ;
But, while he spake, look, gesture, tone of voice,
Though discomposed and vehement, were such
As skill and graceful Nature might suggest
To a proficient of the tragic scene,
Standing before the multitude, beset
With sorrowful events ; and we, who heard
And saw, were moved. Desirous to divert,
Or stem, the current of the speaker's thoughts,
We signified a wish to leave that place
Of stillness and close privacy, which seem'd
A nook for self-examination framed
Or for confession in the sinner's need,
Hidden from all men's view. To our attempt
He yielded not ; but, pointing to a slope
Of mossy turf, defended from the sun ;
And, on that couch inviting us to rest,
Towards that tender-hearted man he turn'd
A serious eye, and thus his speech renew'd :—

“ You never saw, your eyes did never look
On the bright form of her whom once I loved ;
Her silver voice was heard upon the earth,
A sound unknown to you ; else, honour'd friend !
Your heart had borne a pitiable share
Of what I suffer'd when I wept that loss,
And suffer now, not seldom, from the thought
That I remember, and can weep no more.
Stripp'd as I am of all the golden fruit
Of self-esteem ; and by the cutting blasts
Of self-reproach familiarly assail'd ;
I would not yet be of such wintry bareness,
But that some leaf of your regard should hang
Upon my naked branches : lively thoughts

Give birth, full often, to unguarded words ;
I grieve that, in your presence, from my tongue
Too much of frailty hath already dropp'd ;
But that too much demands still more.

“ You know,

Reverend compatriot ; and to you, kind sir,
(Not to be deem'd a stranger, as you come
Following the guidance of these welcome feet
To our secluded vale), it may be told,
That my demerits did not sue in vain
To one, on whose mild radiance many gazed
With hope, and all with pleasure. This fair bride —
In the devotedness of youthful love,
Preferring me to parents, and the choir
Of gay companions, to the natal roof,
And all known places and familiar sights
(Resign'd with sadness gently weighing down
Her trembling expectations, but no more
Than did to her due honour, and to me
Yielded, that day, a confidence sublime
In what I had to build upon) — this bride,
Young, modest, meek, and beautiful, I led
To a low cottage in a sunny bay,
Where the salt sea innocuously breaks,
And the sea-breeze as innocently breathes,
On Devon's leafy shores ; a shelter'd hold,
In a soft clime encouraging the soil
To a luxuriant bounty ! As our steps
Approached th' embower'd abode — our chosen seat —
See, rooted in the earth, its kindly bed,
Th' unendanger'd myrtle, deck'd with flowers,
Before the threshold stands to welcome us !
While, in the flowery myrtle's neighbourhood,
Not overlook'd, but courting no regard,
Those native plants, the holly and the yew,
Gave modest intimation to the mind
Of willingness with which they would unite

With the green myrtle, t' endear the hours
 Of winter, and protect that pleasant place.
 Wild were the walks upon those lonely downs,*
 Track leading into track, how mark'd, how worn
 Into bright verdure, among fern and gorse,
 Winding away its never-ending line
 On their smooth surface, evidence was none :
 But there lay open to our daily haunt,
 A range of unappropriated earth,
 Where youth's ambitious feet might move at large ;
 Whence, unmolested wanderers, we beheld
 The shining giver of the day diffuse
 His brightness o'er a tract of sea and land
 Gay as our spirits, free as our desires,
 As our enjoyments boundless. From these heights
 We dropp'd, at pleasure, into sylvan combs ;
 Where arbours of impenetrable shade,
 And mossy seats, detain'd us side by side,
 Where hearts at ease, and knowledge in our hearts,
 'That all the grove and all the day was ours.'

" But in due season Nature interfered,
 And call'd my partner to resign her share
 In the pure freedom of that wedded life,
 Enjoy'd by us in common. To my hope,
 To my heart's wish, my tender mate became
 The thankful captive of maternal bonds,

* Miss Wordsworth, writing from Alfoxden in Somersetshire, where she and her brother removed to be near Coleridge, thus describes the scenery :—" We are three miles from Stowey, and not two miles from the sea, wherever we turn we have woods, smooth downs, and valleys with small brooks running down them, through green meadows, hardly ever intersected with hedgerows, but scattered over with trees ; the hills that cradle these valleys are either covered with fern and bilberries, or oak woods ;— walks extend for miles over the hill-tops ; the great beauty of which is their wild simplicity : they are perfectly smooth without rocks."
 — Memoir, vol. 1, p. 103.

And those wild paths were left to me alone ;
There could I meditate on follies past,
And, like a weary voyager escaped
From risk and hardship, inwardly retrace
A course of vain delights and thoughtless guilt,
And self-indulgence—without shame pursued ;
There, undisturb'd, could think of, and could thank
Her—whose submissive spirit was to me
Rule and restraint—my guardian ; shall I say
That earthly Providence whose guiding love
Within a port of rest had lodged me safe ;
Safe from temptation, and from danger far ?
Strains follow'd of acknowledgment address'd
To an Authority enthroned above
The reach of sight ; from whom, as from their source,
Proceed all visible ministers of good
That walk the earth—Father of heaven and earth,
Father, and King, and Judge, adored and fear'd !
These acts of mind, and memory, and heart,
And spirit—interrupted and relieved
By observations, transient as the glance
Of flying sunbeams, or to th' outward form
Cleaving, with power inherent and intense
As the mute insect fix'd upon the plant
On whose soft leaves it hangs, and from whose cup
Draws imperceptibly its nourishment,
Endear'd by wanderings ; and the mother's kiss,
And infant's smile, awaited my return.

“ In privacy we dwelt—a wedded pair,
Companions daily, often all day long ;
Not placed by fortune within easy reach
Of various intercourse, nor wishing aught
Beyond the allowance of our own fireside,
The twain within our happy cottage born
Inmates, and heirs of our united love ;
Graced mutually by difference of sex,

By the endearing names of nature bound,
And with no wider interval of time
Between their several births than served for one
To establish something of a leader's sway ;
Yet left them join'd by sympathy in age ;
Equals in pleasure, fellows in pursuit.
On these two pillars rested as in air
Our solitude.

“ It soothes me to perceive,
Your courtesy withholds not from my words
Attentive audience. But, oh ! gentle friends,
As times of quiet and unbroken peace,
Though, for a nation times of blessedness,
Give back faint echo's from th' historian's page ;
So, in the imperfect sounds of this discourse,
Depress'd I hear, how faithless is the voice
Which those most blissful days reverberate.
What special record can, or need be given
To rules and habits, whereby much was done
But all within the sphere of little things,
Of humble, though to us, important cares,
And precious interests ? Smoothly did our life
Advance, not swerving from the path prescribed ;
Her annual, her diurnal round alike
Maintain'd with faithful care. And you divine
The worst effects which our condition saw,
If you imagine changes slowly wrought,
And in their progress imperceptible,
Not wish'd for, sometimes noticed with a sigh,
(Whate'er of good or lovely they might bring),
Sigh of regret, for the familiar good
And loveliness endear'd — which they removed.

“ Seven years of occupation undisturb'd
Establish'd seemingly a right to hold
That happiness : and use and habit gave

To what an alien spirit had acquired
A patrimonial sanctity. And thus,
With thoughts and wishes bounded to this world,
I lived and breathed ; most grateful,— if t' enjoy
Without repining or desire for more,
For different lot, or change to higher sphere
(Only except some impulses of pride
With no determined object, though upheld
By theories with suitable support)—
Most grateful, if in such wise to enjoy
Be proof of gratitude for what we have :
Else, I allow, most thankless. But at once
From some dark seat of fatal power was urged
A claim that shatter'd all. Our blooming girl,
Caught in the gripe of death, with such brief time
To struggle in as scarcely would allow
Her cheek to change its colour, was convey'd
From us to regions inaccessible,
Where height, or depth, admits not the approach
Of living man, though longing to pursue.
With even as brief a warning — and how soon
With what short interval of time between
I tremble yet to think of — our last prop,
Our happy life's only remaining stay —
The brother follow'd — and was seen no more !

“Calm as a frozen lake when ruthless winds
Blow fiercely, agitating earth and sky,
The mother now remain'd ; as if in her,
Who, to the lowest region of the soul,
Had been erewhile unsettled and disturb'd,
This second visitation had no power
To shake — but only to bind up and seal ;
And to establish thankfulness of heart
In Heaven's determinations, ever just.
The eminence on which her spirit stood,
Mine was unable to attain. Immense

The space that sever'd us ! But, as the sight
Communicates with heaven's ethereal orbs
Incalculably distant ; so, I felt
That consolation may descend from far,
(And that is intercourse and union too),
While, overcome with speechless gratitude,
And with a holier love, inspired, I look'd
On her — at once superior to my woes
And partner of my loss. O heavy change !
Dimness o'er this clear luminary crept
Insensibly ; th' immortal and divine
Yielded to mortal reflux ; her pure glory,
As from the pinnacle of worldly state
Wretched ambition drops astounded, fell
Into a gulf obscure of silent grief,
And keen heart-anguish,— of itself ashamed,
Yet obstinately cherishing itself :
And, so consumed, she melted from my arms ;
And left me, on this earth, disconsolate !

“What follow'd cannot be review'd in thought,
Much less retraced in words. If she, of life
Blameless, so intimate with love and joy
And all the tender motions of the soul,
Had been supplanted, could I hope to stand,
Infirm, dependent, and now destitute ?
I call'd on dreams and visions to disclose
That which is veil'd from waking thought ; conjured
Eternity, as men constrain a ghost
To appear and answer ; to the grave I spake
Imploringly ; look'd up, and ask'd the heavens
If angels traverse their cerulean floors,
If fix'd or wandering star could tidings yield
Of the departed spirit — what abode
It occupies — what consciousness retains
Of former loves and interests. Then my soul
Turn'd inward, to examine of what stuff

Time's fetters are composed ; and life was put
To inquisition long and profitless !
By pain of heart now check'd — and now impell'd —
The intellectual power, through words and things,
Went sounding on, a dim and perilous way !
And from those transports, and these toils abstruse,
Some trace am I enabled to retain
Of time, else lost ; existing unto me
Only by records in myself not found.

“ From that abstraction I was roused,— and how ?
Even as a thoughtful shepherd by a flash
Of lightening startled in a gloomy cave
Of these wild hills. For lo ! the dread Bastille,
With all the chambers in its horrid towers,
Fell to the ground, by violence o'erthrown
Of indignation, and with shouts that drown'd
The crash it made in falling ! From the wreck
A golden palace rose, or seem'd to rise,
The appointed seat of equitable law
And mild paternal sway. The potent shock
I felt ; the transformation I perceived,
As marvellously seized as in that moment
When, from the blind mist issuing, I beheld
Glory, beyond all glory ever seen —
Confusion infinite of heaven and earth,
Dazzling the soul. Meanwhile prophetic harps
In every grove were ringing, ‘ War shall cease ;
Did ye not hear that conquest is abjured ?
Bring garlands, bring forth choicest flowers, to deck
The tree of liberty.’ My heart rebounded !
My melancholy voice the chorus join'd :
‘ Be joyful all ye nations in all lands,
Ye that are capable of joy be glad !
Henceforth, whate'er is wanting to yourselves
In others ye shall promptly find ; and all
Be rich by mutual and reflected wealth.’

“Thus was I reconverted to the world ;
Society became my glittering bride,
And airy hopes my children. From the depths
Of natural passion seemingly escaped,
My soul diffused itself in wide embrace
Of institutions, and the forms of things ;
As they exist in mutable array
Upon life’s surface. What though in my veins
There flow’d no Gallic blood, nor had I breathed
The air of France, not less than Gallic zeal
Kindled and burnt among the sapless twigs
Of my exhausted heart. If busy men
In sober conclave met, to weave a web
Of amity, whose living threads should stretch
Beyond the seas, and to the farthest pole,
There did I sit assisting. If, with noise
And acclamation, crowds in open air
Express’d the tumult of their minds, my voice
There mingled, heard or not. The powers of song
I left not uninvoked ; and, in still groves
Where mild enthusiasts tuned a pensive lay
Of thanks and expectation, in accord
With their belief I sang Saturnian rule
Return’d, a progeny of golden years
Permitted to descend, and bless mankind.
With promises the Hebrew Scriptures teem :
I felt the invitation ; and resumed
A long-suspended office in the house
Of public worship, where, the glowing phrase
Of ancient inspiration serving me,
I promised also,— with undaunted trust
Foretold ; and added prayer to prophecy ;
The admiration winning of the crowd,
The help desiring of the pure devout.

“Scorn and contempt forbid me to proceed !
But History, Time’s slavish scribe, will tell

How rapidly the zealots of the cause
Disbanded — or in hostile ranks appear'd ;
Some, tired of honest service ! these, outdone,
Disgusted, therefore, or appall'd , by aims
Of fiercer zealots — so confusion reign'd,
And the more faithful were compell'd to exclaim,
As Brutus did to virtue, ' Liberty,
I worship thee, and find thee but a shade !'

“Such recantation had for me no charm,
Nor would I bend to it ; who should have grieved
At aught, however fair, which bore the mien
Of a conclusion, or catastrophe.
Why then conceal, that, when the simple good
In timid selfishness withdrew, I sought
Other support, not scrupulous whence it came,
And by what compromise it stood, not nice ;
Enough if notions seem'd to be high-pitch'd,
And qualities determin'd. Ruling such,
And with such herding, I maintain'd a strife
Hopeless, and still more hopeless every hour ;
But, in the process, I began to feel
That, if the emancipation of the world
Were miss'd, I should at least secure my own,
And be in part compensated. For rights,
Widely — inveterately usurp'd upon,
I spake with vehemence ; and promptly seized
Whate'er abstraction furnish'd for my needs
Or purposes ; nor scrupled to proclaim,
And propagate, by liberty of life,
Those new persuasions. Not that I rejoiced,
Or even found pleasure, in such vagrant course,
For its own sake ; but farthest from the walk
Which I had trod in happiness and peace,
Was most inviting to a troubled mind
That in a struggling and distemper'd world
Beheld a cherish'd image of itself.

Yet mark the contradictions of which man
Is still the sport ! Here Nature was my guide,
The Nature of the dissolute ; but thee,
O fostering Nature ! I rejected — smiled
At others' tears in pity ; and in scorn
At those, which thy soft influence sometimes drew
From my unguarded heart. The tranquil shores
Of Britain circumscribed me ; else, perhaps,
I might have been entangled among deeds
Which now, as infamous, I should abhor —
Despise, as senseless ; for strangely relish'd
The exasperated spirit of that land,
Which turn'd an angry beak against the down
Of its own breast ; as if it hoped thereby
To disencumber its impatient wings.
But all was quieted by iron bonds
Of military sway. The shifting aims,
The moral interests, the creative might,
The varied functions and high attributes
Of civil action, yielded to a power
Formal, and odious, and contemptible.
In Britain, ruled a panic dread of change ;
The weak were praised, rewarded, and advanced ;
And, from the impulse of a just disdain,
Once more did I retire into myself.*
There feeling no contentment, I resolved
To fly, for safeguard, to some foreign shore
Remote from Europe, from her blasted hopes,
Her fields of carnage, and polluted air.

* We are informed, that in the character of the Solitary, Wordsworth gives utterance to his own ardent political hopes and glowing expectations, as well as to the sadness which subsequent events produced on his mind : a sadness from which he was aroused by the companionship of his beloved sister, who by diverting his mind from politics, left it free to follow its poetic bent.

“ Fresh blew the wind, when o’er the Atlantic main
The ship went gliding with her thoughtless crew :
And who among them, but an exile, freed
From discontent, indifferent, pleased to sit
Among the busily-employed, not more
With obligation charged, with service tax’d,
Than the loose pendent to the idle wind
Upon the tall mast streaming ! But, ye powers
Of soul and sense — mysteriously allied,
Oh, never let the wretched, if a choice
Be left him, trust the freight of his distress
To a long voyage on the silent deep !
For, like a plague, will memory break out,
And, in the blank and solitude of things,
Upon his spirit, with a fever’s strength,
Will conscience prey. Feebly must they have felt
Who, in old time, attired with snakes and whips
The vengeful furies. Beautiful regards
Were turn’d on me — the face of her I loved —
The wife and mother — pityfully fixing
Tender reproaches insupportable.
Where now that boasted liberty ? No welcome
From unknown objects I received ; and those Known and familiar, which the vaulted sky
Did, in the placid clearness of the night,
Disclose, had accusations to prefer
Against my peace. Within the cabin stood
That volume as a compass for the soul
Revered among the nations. I implored
Its guidance ; but the infallible support
Of faith was wanting. Tell me, why refused
To one by storms annoy’d and adverse winds,
Perplex’d with currents, of his weakness sick,
Of vain endeavours tired, and by his own,
And by his nature’s ignorance dismay’d.

“ Long-wish’d-for sight, the Western world appear’d ;

And, when the ship was moor'd, I leap'd ashore
Indignantly — resolved to be a man,
Who, having o'er the past no power, would live
No longer in subjection to the past,
With abject mind — from a tyrannic lord
Inviting penance, fruitlessly endured :
So like a fugitive whose feet have clear'd
Some bound'ry which his followers may not cross
In prosecution of their deadly chase,
Respiring I look'd round. How bright the sun,
How promising the breeze ! Can aught produced
In the old world compare, thought I, for power
And majesty, with this gigantic stream
Sprung from the desert ? And behold, a city
Fresh, youthful, and aspiring ! What are these
To me, or I to them ? As much at least
As he desires that they should be, whom winds
And waves have wafted to this distant shore,
In the condition of a damaged seed
Whose fibres cannot, if they would, take root.
Here may I roam at large ; my business is,
Roaming at large, t' observe, and not to feel ;
And therefore not to act — convinced that all
Which bears the name of action, howsoe'er
Beginning, ends in servitude — still painful,
And mostly profitless. And, sooth to say,
On nearer view, a motley spectacle
Appear'd, of high pretensions — unproved
But by the obstreperous voice of higher still ;
Big passions strutting on a petty stage ;
Which a detach'd spectator may regard
Not unamused. But ridicule demands
Quick change of objects ; and, to laugh alone,
In woods and wilds, or any lonely place,
At a composing distance from the haunts
Of strife and folly, though it be a treat
As choice as musing leisure can bestow ;

Yet, in the very centre of the crowd,
To keep the secret of a poignant scorn,
May suit an airy demon ; but, of all
Unsocial courses, 'tis the one least fit
For the gross spirit of mankind — the one
That soonest fails to please, and quickliest turns
Into vexation. Let us, then, I said,
Leave this unknit Republic to the scourge
Of its own passions ; and to regions haste,
Whose shades have never felt th' encroaching axe,
Or soil endured a transfer in the mart
Of dire rapacity. There, man abides,
Primeval Nature's child. A creature weak
In combination, (wherefore else driven back
So far, and of his old inheritance
So easily deprived) ? but, for that cause,
More dignified, and stronger in himself,
Whether to act, judge, suffer, or enjoy.
True, the intelligence of social art
Hath overpower'd his forefathers, and soon
Will sweep the remnant of his line away :
But contemplations, worthier, nobler far
Than her destructive energies, attend
His independence, when along the side
Of Mississippi, or that northern stream
Which spreads into successive seas, he walks ;
Pleased to perceive his own unshackled life,
And his innate capacities of soul,
There imaged : or, when having gain'd the top
Of some commanding eminence, which yet
Intruder ne'er beheld, he thence surveys
Regions of wood and wide savanna, vast Expanse of unappropriated earth,
With mind that sheds a light on what he sees ;
Free as the sun, and lonely as the sun
Pouring, above his head, its radiance down
Upon a living and rejoicing world !

“ So, westward, tow’rd the unviolated woods,
I bent my way ; and, roaming far and wide,
Fail’d not to greet the merry mocking-bird ;
And while the melancholy muccawiss
(The sportive bird’s companion in the grove)
Repeated o’er and o’er his plaintive cry,
I sympathized at leisure with the sound ;
But that pure archetype of human greatness,
I found him not. There, in his stead, appear’d
A creature, squalid, vengeful, and impure ;
Remorseless, and submissive to no law
But superstitious fear, and abject sloth.
Enough is told ! Here am I — ye have heard
What evidence I seek, and vainly seek ;
What from my fellow-beings I require,
And cannot find ; what I myself have lost,
Nor can regain : how languidly I look
Upon this visible fabric of the world,
May be divined — perhaps it hath been said.
But spare your pity, if there be in me
Aught that deserves respect : for I exist —
Within myself — not comfortless. The tenor
Which my life holds, he readily may conceive
Whoe’er hath stood to watch a mountain brook
In some still passage of its course, and seen
Within the depths of its capacious breast
Inverted trees, and rocks, and azure sky ;
And, on its glassy surface, specks of foam
And conglobated bubbles undissolved,
Numerous as stars ; that, by their ownward lapse,
Betray to sight the motion of the stream,
Else imperceptible ; meanwhile is heard
Perchance a roar or murmur ; and the sound
Though soothing, and the little floating isles
Though beautiful, are both by Nature charged
With the same pensive office ; and make known
Through what perplexing labyrinths, abrupt

Precipitations, and untoward straits,
 The earth-born wanderer hath pass'd ; and quickly,
 That respite o'er, like traverses and toils
 Must be again encounter'd. Such a stream
 Is human life ; and so the spirit fares
 In the best quiet to its course allow'd :
 And such is mine — save only for a hope
 That my particular current soon will reach
 Th' unfathomable gulf where all is still !”

DESPONDENCY CORRECTED.

State of feeling produced by the foregoing narrative — A belief in a superintending Providence the only adequate support under affliction — Wanderer's ejaculation to the Supreme Being — Account of his own devotional feelings in youth involved in it — Implores that he may retain in age the power to find repose among enduring and eternal things — What these latter are — Acknowledges the difficulty of a lively faith — Hence immoderate sorrow — But doubt or despondency not therefore to be inferred — And proceeds to administer consolation to the Solitary — Exhortations — How these are received — Wanderer resumes — And applies his discourse to that other cause of dejection in the Solitary's mind, the disappointment of his expectations from the French Revolution — States the rational grounds of hope — And insists on the necessity of patience and fortitude with respect to the course of the great revolutions of the world — Knowledge the source of tranquillity — Rural life and solitude particularly favourable to a knowledge of the inferior creatures — Study of their habits and ways recommended as exerting a beneficial influence on the affections and the imagination — Exhortation to bodily exertion and an active communion with Nature — Morbid solitude a pitiable thing — If the elevated imagination cannot be exerted, try the humbler fancy—Superstition better than apathy—Apathy and destitution unknown in the infancy of society—The various modes of Religion prevented it—This illustrated in the Jewish, Persian, Babylonian, Chaldean, and Grecian modes of belief—Solitary interposes—Wanderer, in answer, points out the influence of religious and imaginative feeling on the mind in the humble ranks of society, in rural life especially—This illustrated from present and past times—Observation that these principles tend to recall exploded superstitions and popery—Wanderer rebuts this charge and contrasts the dignities of the imagination with the presumptive littleness of certain modern philosophers, whom the Solitary appears to esteem—Recommends to him other lights and guides—Asserts the power of the soul to regenerate herself—Solitary agitated, and asks how—Reply—Personal appeal—Happy for us that the imagination and affections, in our own despite, mitigate the evils of that state of intellectual slavery which the calculating understanding is so apt to produce—Exhortation to activity of body renewed—How Nature is to be communed with—Wanderer concludes with a prospect of a legitimate union of the imagination, the affections, the understanding, and the reason—Effect of the Wanderer's discourse—Evening—Return to the Cottage.

HERE closed the tenant of that lonely vale
 His mournful narrative, commenced in pain,
 In pain commenced, and ended without peace;
 Yet temper'd, not unfrequently, with strains
 Of native feeling grateful to our minds,
 And doubtless yielding some relief to his,
 While we sate listening with compassion due.
 Such pity yet surviving, with firm voice,
 That did not falter, though the heart was moved,
 The Wanderer said:—

“One adequate support

For the calamities of mortal life
 Exists—one only—an assured belief
 That the procession of our fate, howe'er
 Sad or disturb'd, is order'd by a Being
 Of infinite benevolence and power,
 Whose everlasting purposes embrace

All accidents, converting them to good.
The darts of anguish fix not where the seat
Of suffering hath been thoroughly fortified
By acquiescence in the Will supreme
For time and for eternity—by faith,
Faith absolute in God, including hope,
And the defence that lies in boundless love
Of His perfections ; with habitual dread
Of aught unworthily conceived, endured
Impatiently, ill-done, or left undone
To the dishonour of His holy name.
Soul of our souls, and Safeguard of the world,
Sustain, Thou only canst, the sick of heart !
Restore their languid spirits, and recall
Their lost affections unto Thee and thine !”

Then, as we issued from that covert nook,
He thus continued, lifting up his eyes
To heaven : — “ How beautiful this dome of sky,
And the vast hills, in fluctuation fix’d
At Thy command, how awful ! Shall the soul,
Human and rational, report of Thee,
Even less than these ? Be mute who will, who can,
Yet I will praise Thee with impassion’d voice :
My lips, that may forget Thee in the crowd,
Cannot forget Thee here, where Thou hast built
For Thy own glory in the wilderness !
Me didst Thou constitute a priest of thine,
In such a temple as we now behold
Rear’d for thy presence : therefore am I bound
To worship, here and everywhere, as one
Not doom’d to ignorance, though forced to tread,
From childhood up, the ways of poverty ;
From unreflecting ignorance preserved,
And from debasement rescued. By thy grace
The particle divine remain’d unquench’d ;
And, ’mid the wild weeds of a rugged soil,

Thy bounty caused to flourish deathless flowers,
From paradise transplanted. Wintry age
Impends ; the frost will gather round my heart,
And if they wither I am worse than dead !
Come, labour, when the worn-out frame requires
Perpetual sabbath — come, disease and want,
And sad exclusion through decay of sense —
But leave me unabated trust in Thee —
And let Thy favour, to the end of life,
Inspire me with ability to seek
Repose and hope among eternal things,
Father of heaven and earth ! — and I am rich,
And will possess my portion in content ! ”

“ And what are things eternal ? — Powers depart,”
The gray-hair’d Wand’rer steadfastly replied,
Answering the question which himself had asked,
“ Possessions vanish, and opinions change,
And passions hold a fluctuating seat ;
But, by the storms of circumstance unshaken,
And subject neither to eclipse nor wane,
Duty exists ; immutably survive,
For our support, the measures and the forms
Which an abstract intelligence supplies ;
Whose kingdom is where time and space are not.
Of other converse, which mind, soul, and heart
Do, with united urgency, require,
What more, that may not perish ? Thou, dread Source,
Prime, self-existing Cause and End of all
That, in the scale of being fill their place,
Above our human region, or below,
Set and sustain’d — Thou, who didst wrap the cloud
Of infancy around us, that Thyself,
Therein, with our simplicity a while,
Mightst hold, on earth, communion undisturb’d —
Who, from the anarchy of dreaming sleep,
Or from its death-like void, with punctual care,

And touch as gentle as the morning light,
Restor'st us daily to the powers of sense,
And reason's steadfast rule — Thou, Thou alone
Art everlasting, and the blessèd spirits,
Which Thou includest, as the sea her waves.
For adoration Thou endurest ; endure
For consciousness the motions of Thy will ;
For apprehension those transcendent truths
Of the pure intellect, that stand as laws
(Submission constituting strength and power)
Even to Thy Being's infinite majesty !
This universe shall pass away—a frame
Glorious, because the shadow of thy might !
A step, or link, for intercourse with Thee.
Ah ! if the time must come, in which my feet
No more shall stray where meditation leads
By flowing stream, through wood, or craggy wild,
Loved haunts like these — the unimprison'd mind
May yet have scope to range among her own,
Her thoughts, her images, her high desires.
If the dear faculty of sight should fail,
Still it may be allow'd me to remember
What visionary powers of eye and soul
In youth were mine ; when, station'd on the top
Of some huge hill, expectant, I beheld
The sun rise up, from distant climes return'd
Darkness to chase, and sleep, and bring the day,
His bounteous gift ! — or saw him towards the deep
Sink, with a retinue of flaming clouds
Attended ; then my spirit was entranced
With joy exalted to beatitude ;
The measure of my soul was fill'd with bliss
And holiest love ; as earth, sea, air, with light,
With pomp, with glory, with magnificence !

“ Those fervent raptures are for ever flown,
And, since their date, my soul hath undergone

Change manifold, for better or for worse ;
Yet cease I not to struggle and t' aspire
Heavenward, and chide the part of me that flags
Through sinful choice, or dread necessity
On human nature, from above, imposed.
'Tis, by comparison, an easy task
Earth to despise ; but, to converse with Heaven —
This is not easy. To relinquish all
We have, or hope, of happiness and joy,
And stand in freedom loosen'd from this world,
I deem not arduous ; but must needs confess,
That 'tis a thing impossible to frame
Conceptions equal to the soul's desires,
And the most difficult of tasks to keep
Heights which the soul is competent to gain.
Man is of dust : ethereal hopes are his,
Which, when they should sustain themselves aloft,
Want due consistence ; like a pillar of smoke
That with majestic energy from earth
Rises, but, having reach'd the thinner air,
Melts, and dissolves, and is no longer seen.
From this infirmity of mortal kind
Sorrow proceeds, which else were not ; at least,
If grief be something hallow'd and ordain'd,
If, in proportion, it be just and meet,
Through this, 'tis able to maintain its hold
In that excess which conscience disapproves.
For who could sink and settle to that point
Of selfishness ; so senseless who could be
In framing estimates of loss and gain,
As long and perseveringly to mourn
For any object of his love, removed
From this unstable world, if he could fix
A satisfying view upon that state
Of pure, imperishable blessedness,
Which reason promises, and Holy Writ
Insures to all believers ? Yet mistrust

Is of such incapacity, methinks,
No natural branch ; despondency far less.
And, if there be whose tender frames have droop'd
Even to the dust, apparently through weight
Of anguish unrelevied, and lack of power,
An agonizing sorrow to transmute,
Infer not hence a hope from those withheld
When wanted most ; a confidence impair'd
So pitiably, that, having ceased to see
With bodily eyes, they are borne down by love
Of what is lost, and perish through regret.
Oh, no ! full oft the innocent sufferer sees
Too clearly, feels too vividly, and longs
To realize the vision with intense
And over-constant yearning : there, there lies
The excess, by which the balance is destroy'd.
Too, too contracted are these walls of flesh,
This vital warmth too cold, these visual orbs,
Though inconceivably endow'd, too dim
For any passion of the soul that leads
To ecstasy, and, all the crooked paths
Of time and change disdaining, takes its course
Along the line of limitless desires.
I, speaking now from such disorder free —
Nor sleep, nor craving, but in settled peace —
I cannot doubt that they whom you deplore
Are glorified ; or, if they sleep, shall wake
From sleep, and dwell with God in endless love.
Hope, below this, consists not with belief
In mercy, carried infinite degrees
Beyond the tenderness of human hearts ;
Hope, below this, consists not with belief
In perfect wisdom, guiding mightiest power,
That finds no limits but its own pure will.

“ Here, then, we rest, not fearing to be left
In undisturb'd possession of our creed,

For aught that human reasoning can achieve
To unsettle or perplex us ; yet with pain
Acknowledging, and grievous self-reproach,
That, though immovably convinced, we want
Zeal, and the virtue to exist by faith,
As soldiers live by courage ; as, by strength
Of heart, the sailor fights with roaring seas.
Alas ! the endowment of immortal power
Is match'd unequally with custom, time,
And domineering faculties of sense,
In all ; in most, with superadded foes,
Idle temptations, open vanities
Of dissipation ; countless, still renew'd,
Ephemeral offspring of the unblushing world :
And, in the private regions of the mind,
Ill-govern'd passions, ranklings of despite,
Immoderate wishes, pining discontent,
Distress and care. What then remains ? To seek Those helps, for his occasions ever near,
Who lacks not will to use them ; vows, renew'd
On the first motion of a holy thought ;
Vigils of contemplation ; praise, and prayer, —
A stream which from the fountain of the heart,
Issuing, however feebly, nowhere flows
Without access of unexpected strength.
But, above all, the victory is most sure
For him who, seeking faith by virtue, strives
To yield entire submission to the law
Of conscience, — conscience revered and obey'd
As God's most intimate prescence in the soul,
And His most perfect image in the world.
Endeavour thus to live ; these rules regard ;
These helps solicit ; and a steadfast seat
Shall then be yours among the happy few
Who dwell on earth, yet breathe empyreal air,
Sons of the morning. For your nobler part,
Ere disencumber'd of her mortal chains,

Doubt shall be quell'd and trouble chased away,
With only such degree of sadness left
As may support longings of pure desire,
And strengthen love, rejoicing secretly
In the sublime attractions of the grave."

While, in this strain, the venerable sage
Pour'd forth his aspirations, and announced
His judgments, near that lonely house we paced
A plot of green sward, seemingly preserved
By Nature's care from wreck of scatter'd stones,
And from the encroachment of encircling heath.
Small space ; but, for reiterated steps,
Smooth and commodious ; as a stately deck
Which to and fro the mariner is used
To tread for pastime, talking with his mates,
Or haply thinking of far-distant friends,
While the ship glides before a steady breeze.
Stillness prevail'd around us ; and the voice
That spake was capable to lift the soul
Towards regions yet more tranquil. But, methought
That he, whose fix'd despondency had given
Impulse and motive to that strong discourse,
Was less upraised in spirit than abash'd ;
Shrinking from admonition, like a man
Who feels that to exhort is to reproach.
Yet, not to be diverted from his aim,
The sage continued : — " For that other loss,
The loss of confidence in social man,
By the unexpected transports of our age
Carried so high, that every thought which look'd
Beyond the temporal destiny of the kind,
To many seem'd superfluous, as no cause
For such exalted confidence could e'er
Exist ; so, none is now for such despair :
The two extremes are equally remote
From truth and reason ; do not, then, confound

One with the other, but reject them both,
And choose the middle point, whereon to build Sound expectations. This doth he advise
Who shared at first the illusion ; but was soon
Cast from the pedestal of pride by shocks
Which Nature gently gave in woods and fields ;
Nor unreprieved by Providence, thus speaking
To the inattentive children of the world : —
' Vain-glorious generation ! what new powers
On you have been conferr'd — what gifts, withheld
From your progenitors, have ye received,
Fit recompence of new desert — what claim
Are ye prepared to urge, that my decrees
For you should undergo a sudden change ;
And the weak functions of one busy day,
Reclaiming and extirpating, perform
What all the slowly-moving years of time,
With their united force, have left undone ?
By nature's gradual processes be taught,
By story be confounded. Ye aspire
Rashly, to fall once more ; and that false fruit,
Which, to your overweening spirits, yields
Hope of a flight celestial, will produce
Misery and shame. But wisdom of her sons
Shall not the less, though late, be justified.

" Such timely warning," said the Wanderer, " gave That visionary voice ; and, at this day,
When a Tartarean darkness overspreads
The groaning nations ; when the impious rule,
By will or by establish'd ordinance,
Their own dire agents, and constrain the good
To acts which they abhor ; though I bewail
This triumph, yet the pity of my heart
Prevents me not from owning that the law
By which mankind now suffers, is most just.
For by superior energies, more strict

Affiance in each other, faith more firm
 In their unhallow'd principles, the bad
 Have fairly earn'd a victory o'er the weak,
 The vacillating, inconsistent good.
 Therefore, not unconsol'd, I wait — in hope
 To see the moment when the righteous cause
 Shall gain defenders zealous and devout
 As they who have opposed her ; in which Virtue
 Will to her efforts tolerate no bounds
 That are not lofty as her rights ; aspiring
 By impulse of her own ethereal zeal.
 That spirit only can redeem mankind :
 And when that sacred spirit shall appear,
 Then shall our triumph be complete as theirs.
 Yet, should this confidence prove vain, the wise
 Have still the keeping of their proper peace,
 Are guardians of their own tranquility.
 They act or they recede, observe and feel,
 'Knowing' ( to adopt the energetic words Which a time-hallow'd poet hath employ'd)
 'Knowing the heart of man is set to be
 The centre of this world, about the which Those revolutions of disturbances
 Still roll ; where all th' aspects of misery
 Predominate ; whose strong effects are such
 As he must bear, being powerless to redress,
*And that unless above himself he can
 Erect himself, how poor a thing is man !* *

"Happy is he who lives to understand
 Not human nature only, but explores
 All natures, to the end that he may find
 The law that governs each ; and where begins
 The union, the partition where, that makes
 Kind and degree among all visible beings ;
 The constitutions, powers, and faculties,

* Daniel.

Which they inherit, — cannot step beyond, —
And cannot fall beneath ; that do assign
To every class its station and its office,
Through all the mighty commonwealth of things,
Up from the creeping plant to sovereign man.
Such converse, if directed by a meek,
Sincere, and humble spirit, teaches love ;
For knowledge is delight ; and such delight
Breeds love ; yet, suited as it rather is
To thought and to the climbing intellect,
It teaches less to love, than to adore ;
If that be not indeed the highest love !”

“ Yet,” said I, tempted here to interpose,
“ The dignity of life is not impair’d
By aught that innocently satisfies
The humbler cravings of the heart ; and he
Is a still happier man, who, for those heights
Of speculation not unfit, descends,
And such benign affections cultivates
Among the inferior kinds ; not merely those
That he may call his own, and which depend,
As individual objects of regard,
Upon his care ; from whom he also looks
For signs and tokens of a mutual bond ;
But others, far beyond this narrow sphere,
Whom, for the very sake of love, he loves.
Nor is it a mean phase of rural life
And solitude, that they do favour most,
Most frequently call forth, and best sustain
These pure sensations ; that can penetrate
The obstreperous city ; on the barren seas
Are not unfelt,— and much might recommend,
How much they might inspirit and endear,
The loneliness of this sublime retreat !”

“ Yes,” said the sage, resuming the discourse,

Again directed to his downcast friend,
 "If, with the froward will and grovelling soul
 Of man offended, Liberty is here,
 And invitation every hour renew'd,
 To mark their placid state who never heard
 Of a command which they have power to break,
 Or rule which they are tempted to transgress :
 These, with a soothed or elevated heart,
 May we behold — their knowledge register —
 Observe their ways ; and, free from envy, find
 Complacence there : but wherefore this to you ?
 I guess that, welcome to your lonely hearth,
 The redbreast feeds in winter from your hand ;
 A box perchance is from your casement hung
 For the small wren to build in ; not in vain,
 The barriers disregarding that surround
 This deep abiding-place, before your sight
 Mounts on the breeze the butterfly, and soars, *
 Small creature as she is, from earth's bright flowers
 Into the dewy clouds. Ambition reigns
 In the waste wilderness ; the soul ascends
 Towards her native firmament of heaven,
 When the fresh eagle, in the month of May,
 Upborne at evening, on replenish'd wing,
 This shady valley leaves, and leaves the dark
 Empurpled hills, conspicuously renewing
 A proud communication with the sun
 Low sunk beneath the horizon. List ! — I heard,
 From yon huge breast of rock, a solemn bleat,
 Sent forth as if it were the mountain's voice,
 As if the visible mountain made the cry,

* P. Commire, a pleasing writer of Latin verse, says of the flight of a butterfly,

"Florem putares nare per liquidam æthera."

"It flies, and seems a flower that floats in air !"

— Curiosities of Literature.

Again !” The effect upon the soul was such
As he express’d : for, from the mountain’s heart
The solemn bleat appear’d to come ; there was
No other — and the region all around
Stood silent, empty of all shape of life.
It was a lamb, left somewhere to itself,
The plaintive spirit of the solitude !
He paused, as if unwilling to proceed,
Through consciousness that silence in such place
Was best, — the most affecting eloquence.
But soon his thoughts return’d upon themselves,
And, in soft tone of speech, he thus resumed :—

“ Ah ! if the heart, too confidently raised,
Perchance too lightly occupied, or lull’d
Too easily, despise or overlook
The vassalage that binds her to the earth,
Her sad dependence upon time, and all
The trepidations of mortality,
What place so destitute and void but there
The little flower her vanity shall check ;
The trailing worm reprove her thoughtless pride ?

“ These craggy regions, these chaotic wilds,
Does that benignity pervade, that warms
The mole contented with her darksome walk
In the cold ground ; and to the emmet gives
Her foresight, and the intelligence that makes
The tiny creatures strong by social league ;
Supports the generations, multiplies
Their tribes till we behold a spacious plain
Or grassy bottom, all with little hills —
Their labour — cover’d, as a lake with waves ;
Thousands of cities, in the desert place
Built up of life, and food, and means of life !
Nor wanting here, to entertain the thought,
Creatures that in communities exists,

Less, as might seem, for general guardianship,
Or through dependence upon mutual aid,
Than by participation of delight
And a strict love of fellowship, combined.
What other spirit can it be that prompts
The gilded summer flies to mix and weave
Their sports together in the solar beam,
Or in the gloom of twilight hum their joy?
More obviously the self-same influence rules
The feather'd kinds; the fieldfare's pensive flocks,
The cawing rooks, and sea-mews from afar,
Hovering above these inland solitudes,
Unscatter'd by the wind, at whose loud call
Their voyage was begun: nor is its power
Unfelt among the sedentary fowl
That seek yon pool, and there prolong their stay
In silent congress; or together roused
Take flight; while with their clang the air resounds,
And, over all, in that ethereal arch,
Is the mute company of changeful clouds;
Bright apparition suddenly put forth,
The rainbow, smiling on the faded storm;
The mild assemblage of the starry heavens;
And the great sun, earth's universal lord!

“How bountiful is Nature! he shall find
Who seeks not; and to him who hath not ask'd
Large measure shall be dealt. Three Sabbath-days
Are scarcely told, since, on a service bent
Of mere humanity, you clomb those heights;
And what a marvellous and heavenly show
Was to your sight reveal'd! — the swains moved on,
And heeded not: you linger'd, and perceived.
There is a luxury in self-dispraise;
And inward self-disparagement affords
To meditative spleen a grateful feast.
Trust me, pronouncing on your own desert,

^ You judge thankfully ; distemper'd nerves
Infect the thoughts ; the languor of the frame
Depresses the soul's vigour. Quit your couch —
Cleave not so fondly to your moody cell ;
Nor let the hallow'd powers that shed from heaven
Stillness and rest, with disapproving eye
Look down upon your taper, through a watch
Of midnight hours, unseasonably twinkling
In this deep hollow ; like a sullen star
Dimly reflected in a lonely pool.
Take courage, and withdraw yourself from ways
That run not parallel to Nature's course.
Rise with the lark ! your matins shall obtain
Grace, be their composition what it may,
If but with hers perform'd ; climb once again,
Climb every day, those ramparts ; meet the breeze
Upon their tops,—adventurous as a bee
That from your garden thither soars, to feed
On new-blown heath ; let yon commanding rock
Be your frequented watch-tower ; roll the stone
In thunder down the mountains : with all your might Chase the wild goat ; and, if the bold red deer
Fly to these harbours, driven by hound and horn
Loud echoing, add your speed to the pursuit ;
So, wearied to your hut shall you return,
And sink at evening into sound repose.”

The Solitary lifted towards the hills
An animated eye ; and thoughts were mine
Which this ejaculation clothed in words :—
“ Oh ! what a joy it were, in vigorous health,
To have a body, (this our vital frame
With shrinking sensibility endued,
And all the nice regards of flesh and blood),
And to the elements surrender it
As if it were a spirit ! — How divine,
The liberty, for frail, for mortal man,

To roam at large among unpeopled glens
And mountainous retirements, only trod
By devious footsteps ; regions consecrate
To oldest time ! and, reckless of the storm
That keeps the raven quiet in her nest,
Be as a presence or a motion — one
Among the many there ; and, while the mists
Flying, and rainy vapours, call out shapes
And phantoms from the crags and solid earth
As fast as a musician scatters sounds
Out of an instrument ; and, while the streams
(As at a first creation and in haste
To exercise their untried faculties)
Descending from the region of the clouds
And starting from the hollows of the earth
More multitudinous every moment, rend
Their way before them, what a joy to roam
An equal among mightiest energies ;
And haply sometimes with articulate voice,
Amid the deafening tumult, scarcely heard
By him that utters it, exclaim aloud,
‘ Be this continued so from day to day,
Nor let it have an end from month to month ! ’ ”

“ Yes,” said the Wanderer, taking from my lips
The strain of transport, “ whosoe’er in youth
Has, through ambition of his soul, given way
To such desires, and grasp’d at such delight,
Shall feel the stirrings of them late and long ;
In spite of all the weakness that life brings,
Its cares and sorrows ; he, though taught to own
The tranquilising power of time, shall wake—
Wake sometimes to a noble restlessness—
Loving the spots which once he gloried in.

“ Compatriot—friend ! remote are Garry’s hills,
The streams far distant of your native glen ;

Yet is their form and image here express'd
As by a duplicate — at least set forth
With brotherly resemblance. Turn your steps
Wherever fancy leads ; by day, by night,
Are various engines working, not the same
As those by which your soul in youth was moved,
But by the great Artificer endued
With no inferior power. You dwell alone ;
You walk, you live, you speculate alone ;
Yet doth remembrance, like a sovereign prince,
For you a stately gallery maintain
Of gay or tragic pictures. You have seen,
Have acted, suffer'd, travell'd far, observed
With no incurious eye ; and books are yours,
Within whose silent chamber treasure lies
Preserved from age to age ; more precious far
Than that accumulated store of gold
And orient gems, which, for a day of need,
The sultan hides within ancestral tombs ;
These hoards of truth you can unlock at will :
And music waits upon your skilful touch,— Sounds which the wandering shepherd from these heights
Hears, and forgets his purpose. Furnish'd thus,
How can you droop, if willing to be raised ?

“ A piteous lot it were to flee from man —
Yet not rejoice in nature. He, whose hours
Are by domestic pleasures uncaress'd
And unenliven'd ; who exists whole years
Apart from benefits received or done
'Mid the transactions of the bustling crowd ;
Who neither hears, nor feels a wish to hear,
Of the world's interests — such a one hath need
Of a quick fancy and an active heart,
That for a day's consumption books may yield
A not unwholesome food, and earth and air

Supply his morbid humour with delight.
Truth has her pleasure-grounds, her haunts of ease
And easy contemplation — gay parterres,
And labyrinthine walks, her sunny glades
And shady groves, for recreation framed :
These may he range, if willing to partake
Their soft indulgences, and in due time
May issue thence, recruited for the tasks
And course of service Truth requires from those Who tend her altars, wait upon her throne,
And guard her fortresses. Who thinks, and feels,
And recognises ever and anon
The breeze of Nature stirring in his soul,
Why need such man go desperately astray,
And nurse 'the dreadful appetite of death?'
If tired with systems, each in its degree
Substantial, and all crumbling in their turn,
Let him build systems of his own, and smile
At the fond work — demolish'd with a touch ;
If unreligious, let him be at once,
Among ten thousand innocents, enroll'd
A pupil in the many-chamber'd school,
Where superstition weaves her airy dreams.

“Life's autumn past I stand on winter's verge,
And daily lose what I desire to keep
Yet rather would I instantly decline
To the traditionary sympathies
Of a most rustic ignorance, and take
A fearful apprehension from the owl
Or death-watch, and as readily rejoice,
If two auspicious magpies cross'd my way ;
This rather would I do than see and hear
The repetitions wearisome of sense,
Where soul is dead, and feeling hath no place ;
Where knowledge, ill begun in cold remark
On outward things, with formal inference ends,

Or, if the mind turn inward, 'tis perplex'd,
Lost in a gloom of uninspired research :
Meanwhile, the heart within the heart, the seat
Where peace and happy consciousness should dwell
On its own axis restlessly revolves,
Yet nowhere finds the cheering light of truth.

✓ " Upon the breast of new-created earth
Man walk'd ; and when or wheresoe'er he moved,
Alone or mated, solitude was not.
He heard, upon the wind, the articulate voice
Of God ; and angels to his sight appear'd,
Crowning the glorious hills of paradise,
Or through the groves gliding like morning mist
Enkindled by the sun. He sate, and talk'd
With winged messengers, who daily brought
To his small island in th' ethereal deep,
Tidings of joy and love. From these pure heights (Whether of actual vision, sensible
To sight and feeling, or that in this sort
Have condescendingly been shadow'd forth
Communications spiritually maintain'd,
And intuitions moral and divine)
Fell human kind — to banishment condemn'd,
That flowing years repeal'd not, and distress,
And grief spread wide ; but man escaped the doom
Of destitution — solitude was not.
Jehovah — shapeless Power above all powers,
Single and one, the omnipresent God,
By vocal utterance, or blaze of light,
Or cloud of darkness, localized in heaven —
On earth, enshrined within the wandering ark,
Or, out of Sion, thundering from his throne
Between the Cherubim — on the chosen race
Shower'd miracles, and ceased not to dispense
Judgements that fill'd the land from age to age
With hope, and love, and gratitude, and fear,

And with amazement smote — thereby to assert
His scorn'd, or unacknowledged sovereignty.
And when the One, ineffable of name,
In nature indivisible, withdrew
From mortal adoration or regard,
Not then was Diety engulf'd, nor man,
The rational creature, left to feel the weight
Of his own reason, without sense or thought
Of higher reason, and a purer will
To benefit and bless, through mightier power.
Whether the Persian, zealous to reject
Altar and image, and the inclusive walls
And roofs of temples built by human hands,
The loftiest heights ascending, from their tops,
With myrtle-wreath'd tiara on his brows,
Presented sacrifice to moon and stars,
And to the winds and mother elements,
And the whole circle of the heavens, for him
A sensitive existence, and a God
With lifted hands invoked and songs of praise.
Or, less reluctantly to bonds of sense
Yielding his soul, the Babylonian framed
For influence undefined a personal shape ;
And, from the plain, with toil immense, uprear'd
Tower eight times planted on the top of tower,
That Belus, nightly to his splendid couch
Descending, there might rest ; and, from that height,
Pure and serene, the godhead overlook
Winding Euphrates, and the city vast
Of his devoted worshippers, far stretch'd,
With grove, and field, and garden interspersed ;
Their town, and foodful region for support
Against the pressure of beleagu'ring war.

“ Chaldean shepherds, ranging trackless fields,
Beneath the concave of unclouded skies
Spread like a sea, in boundless solitude,

Look'd on the polar star, as on a guide
And guardian of their course, that never closed
His steadfast eye. The planetary five
With a submissive reverence they beheld ;
Watch'd, from the centre of their sleeping flocks,
Those radiant Mercuries, that seem'd to move
Carrying through ether, in perpetual round,
Decrees and resolutions of the gods ;
And, by their aspects, signifying works
Of dim futurity, to man reveal'd.
The imaginative faculty was lord
Of observations natural ; and, thus
Led on, those shepherds made report of stars
In set rotation passing to and fro,
Between the orbs of our apparent sphere
And its invisible counterpart, adorn'd
With answering constellations, under earth,
Removed from all approach of living sight,
But present to the dead, who, so they deem'd,
Like those celestial messengers, beheld
All accidents, and judges were of all.

✓ “The lively Grecian, in a land of hills,
Rivers, and fertile plains, and sounding shores,
Under a cope of variegated sky,
Could find commodious place for every god,
Promptly received, as prodigally brought,
From the surrounding countries, at the choice
Of all adventurers. With unrivall'd skill,
As nicest observations furnish'd hints
For studious fancy, did his hand bestow
On fluent operations a fix'd shape ;
Metal or stone, idolatrously served.
And yet, triumphant o'er this pompous shew
Of art, this palpable array of sense,
On every side encounter'd ; in despite
Of the gross fictions chanted in the streets

By wandering rhapsodists ; and in contempt
Of doubt and bold denials hourly urged
Amid the wrangling schools — a ‘spirit’ hung,
Beautiful region ! o’er thy towns and farms,
Statues and temples, and memorial tombs ;
And emanations were perceived, and acts
Of immortality, in Nature’s course,
Exemplified by mysteries that were felt
As bonds, on grave philosopher imposed
And armèd warrior ; and in every grove
A gay or pensive tenderness prevail’d,
When piety more awful had relax’d.
‘Take, running river, take these locks of mine,’—
Thus would the votary say,—‘this sever’d hair,
My vow fulfilling, do I here present,
Thankful for my belovèd child’s return.
Thy banks, Cephisus, he again hath trod,
Thy murmurs heard, and drunk the crystal lymph
With which thou dost refresh the thirsty lip,
And moisten all day long those flowery fields.’
And doubtless, sometimes, when the hair was shed
Upon the flowing stream, a thought arose
Of life continuous—being unimpair’d—
That hath been, is, and where it was and is,
There shall be—seen, and heard, and felt, and known,
And recognised,—existence unexposed
To the blind walk of mortal accident ;
From diminution safe and weakening age ;
While man grows old, and dwindles, and decays,
And countless generations of mankind
Depart, and leave no vestige where they trod.

“ We live by admiration, hope, and love ;
And, even as these are well and wisely fix’d,
In dignity of being we ascend.
But what is error ;” “ Answer he who can !”
The sceptic somewhat haughtily exclaim’d ;

“ Love, hope, and admiration — are they not Mad fancy’s favourite vassals? Does not life
Use them, full oft, as pioneers to ruin,
Guides to destruction? Is it well to trust
Imagination’s light when Reason’s fails,
Th’ unguarded taper where the guarded faints?
Stoop from those heights, and soberly declare
What error is; and, of our errors, which Doth most debase the mind! the genuine seats
Of power, where are they? Who shall regulate,
With truth, the scale of intellectual rank?”

“ Methinks,” persuasively the sage replied,
“ That for this arduous office you possess
Some rare advantages. Your early days
A grateful recollection must supply
Of much exalted good that may attend
Upon the very humblest state. Your voice
Hath in my hearing often testified
That poor men’s children, they, and they alone,
By their condition taught, can understand
The wisdom of the prayer that daily asks
For daily bread. A consciousness is yours
How feelingly religion may be learn’d
In smoky cabins, from a mother’s tongue —
Heard while the dwelling vibrates to the din
Of the contiguous torrent, gathering strength
At every moment,—and, with strength, increase
Of fury; or while snow is at the door,
Assaulting and defending, and the wind,
A sightless labourer, whistles at his work —
Fearful, but resignation tempers fear,
And piety is sweet to infant minds.
The shepherd lad, who in the sunshine carves
On the green turf a dial, to divide
The silent hours; and who to that report
Can portion out his pleasures, and adapt

His round of pastoral duties, is not left
With less intelligence for moral things
Of gravest import. Early he perceives,
Within himself, a measure and a rule,
Which to the sun of truth he can apply,
That shines for him, and shines for all mankind.
Experience, daily fixing his regards
On nature's wants, he knows how few they are,
And where they lie, how answer'd and appeased.
This knowledge ample recompence affords
For manifold privations ; he refers
His notions to this standard ; on this rock
Rests his desires ; and hence, in after life,
Soul-strengthening patience, and sublime content.
Imagination — not permitted here
To waste her powers, as in the worldling's mind,
On fickle pleasures, and superfluous cares,
And trivial ostentation — is left free
And puissant to range the solemn walks
Of time and nature, girded by a zone
That, while it binds, invigorates and supports.
Acknowledge, then, that whether by the side
Of his poor hut, or on the mountain-top,
Or in the cultured field, a man like this (Take from him what you will upon the score
Of ignorance or illusion) lives and breathes
For noble purposes of mind : his heart
Beats to the heroic song of ancient days ;
His eye distinguishes ; his soul creates ;
And those illusions which excite the scorn
Or move the pity of unthinking minds,
Are they not mainly outward ministers
Of inward conscience ? With whose service charged
They come and go, appear and disappear ;
Diverting evil purposes, remorse
Awakening, chastening an intemperate grief,
Or pride of heart abating : and when'er

For less important ends those phantoms move,
Who would forbid them, if their presence serve,
Among wild mountains and unpeopled heaths,
Filling a space else vacant, to exalt
The forms of Nature, and enlarge her powers?

✓ "Once more to distant ages of the world
Let us revert, and place before our thoughts
The face which rural solitude might wear
To the unenlighten'd swains of pagan Greece.
In that fair clime the lonely herdsman, stretch'd
On the soft grass through half a summer's day,
With music lull'd his indolent repose :
And, in some fit of weariness, if he,
When his own breath was silent, chanced to hear
A distant strain, far sweeter than the sounds
Which his poor skill could make, his fancy fetch'd
Even from the blazing chariot of the sun,
A beardless youth, who touch'd a golden lute,
And fill'd the illumined grove with ravishment.
The nightly hunter, lifting up his eyes
Towards the crescent moon, with grateful heart
Call'd on the lovely wanderer who bestow'd
That timely light, to share his joyous sport ;
And hence, a beaming goddess, with her nymphs,
Across the lawn and through the darksome grove
(Not unaccompanied with tuneful notes
By echo multiplied from rock or cave)
Swept in the storm of chase, as moon and stars
Glance rapidly along the clouded heavens,
When winds are blowing strong. The traveller slaked
His thirst from rill or gushing fount, and thank'd
The Naiad. Sunbeams upon distant hills
Gliding apace, with shadows in their train,
Might, with small help from fancy, be transform'd
Into fleet Oreads, sporting visibly.
The zephyrs fanning as they pass'd, their wings,

Lack'd not, for love, fair objects, whom they woo'd
With gentle whisper. Wither'd boughs grotesque,
Stripp'd of their leaves and twigs by hoary age,
From depth of shaggy covert peeping forth
In the low vale, or on steep mountain-side —
And sometimes, intermix'd with stirring horns
Of the live deer, or goat's depending beard —
These were the lurking satyrs, a wild brood
Of gamesome deities — or Pan himself,
The simple shepherd's awe-inspiring god !”

No apter strain could have been chosen : I mark'd
Its kindly influence on the yielding brow
Of our companion gradually diffused,
While, listening, he had paced the noiseless turf,
Like one whose untired ear a murmuring stream
Detains ; but tempted now to interpose,
He with a smile exclaim'd, —

“’Tis well you speak

At a safe distance from our native land,
And from the mansions where our youth was taught.
The true descendants of those godly men
Who swept from Scotland, in a flame of zeal,
Shrine, altar, image, and the massy piles
That harbour'd them, — the souls retaining yet
? The churlish features of that after race
Who fled to cavës, and woods, and naked rocks,
In deadly scorn of superstitious rites,
Or what their scruples construed to be such —
How, think you, would they tolerate this scheme
Of fine propensities, that tends, if urged
Far as it might be urged, to sow afresh
The weeds of Romish phantasy, in vain
Uprooted ; would re-consecrate our wells
To good Saint Fillan, and to fair Saint Anne ;
And from long banishment recall Saint Giles,
To watch again with tutelary love

O'er stately Edinburgh throned on crags?
A blessèd restoration—to behold
The patron, on the shoulders of his priests,
Once more parading through her crowded streets,
Now simply guarded by the sober powers
Of science, and philosophy, and sense!"

This answer follow'd: — "You have turn'd my thoughts

Upon our brave progenitors, who rose
Against idolatry with warlike mind,
And shrunk from vain observances, to lurk
In caves, and woods, and under dismal rocks,
Deprived of shelter, covering, fire, and food;
Why? — for this very reason — that they felt,
And did acknowledge, wheresoe'er they moved,
A spiritual presence, oft-times misconceived:
But still a high dependence, a divine
Bounty and government, that fill'd their hearts
With joy, and gratitude, and fear, and love;
And from their fervent lips drew hymns of praise
With which the deserts rang. Though favour'd less,
Far less, than these, yet such, in their degree,
Were those bewilder'd pagans of old time.
Beyond their own poor natures and above
They look'd; were humbly thankful for the good
Which the warm sun solicited, and earth
Bestow'd; were gladsome, — and their moral sense
They fortified with reverence for the gods;
And they had hopes that overstepp'd the grave.

"Now, shall our great discoverers," he exclaim'd,
Raising his voice triumphantly, "obtain
From sense and reason less than these obtain'd,
Though far misled? Shall men for whom our age
Unbaffled powers of vision hath prepared,
To explore the world without and world within,

Be joyless as the blind? Ambitious souls —
Whom earth, at this late season, hath produced
To regulate the moving spheres, and weigh
The planets in the hollow of their hand;
And they who rather dive than soar, whose pains
Have solved the elements, or analysed
The thinking principal — shall they, in fact,
Prove a degraded race? And what avails
Renown, if their presumption make them such?
Oh! there is laughter at their work in heaven!
Inquire of ancient Wisdom; go, demand
Of mighty Nature, if 'twas ever meant
That we should pry far off, yet be unraised:
That we should pore, and dwindle as we pore,
Viewing all objects unremittingly
In disconnexion dead and spiritless;
And still dividing, and dividing still,
Break down all grandeur, still unsatisfied
With the perverse attempt, while littleness
May yet become more little; waging thus
An impious warfare with the very life
Of our own souls! And if indeed there be An all-pervading Spirit, upon whom
Our dark foundations rest, could he design,
Or will His rites and services permit
That this magnificent effect of power,
The earth we tread, the sky which we behold
By day, and all the pomp which night reveals,
That these — and that superior mystery
Our vital frame, so fearfully devised,
And the dread soul within it — should exist
Only to be examined, ponder'd, search'd,
Probed, vex'd, and criticised? Accuse me not
Of arrogance, unknown wanderer as I am —
If, having walk'd with Nature threescore years,
And offer'd, far as frailty would allow,
My heart a daily sacrifice to Truth,

I now affirm of Nature and of Truth,
Whom I have served, that their divinity
Revolts, offended, at the ways of men,
Sway'd by such motives, to such end employ'd ;
Philosophers, who, when the human soul
Is of a thousand faculties composed,
And twice ten thousand interests, do yet prize
This soul, and the transcendent universe,
No more than as a mirror that reflects
To proud self-love her own intelligence ;
That one poor finite object, in the abyss
Of infinite being, twinkling restlessly !

“ Nor higher place can be assign'd to him
And his compeers— the laughing sage of France.*
Crown'd was he, if my memory doth not err,
With laurel planted upon hoary hairs,
In sign of conquest by his wit achieved,
And benefits his wisdom had conferr'd.
His tottering body was oppress'd with flowers ;
Far less becoming ornaments than those
With which spring often decks a mouldering tree !
Yet so it pleased a fond, a vain old man,
And a most frivolous people. Him I mean
Who framed, to ridicule confiding faith,

* Voltaire. “ I am tired,” he is reported to have said, “ of hearing it reported that twelve men were sufficient to found Christianity. I will shew the world that one is sufficient to destroy it.” Yielding to the urgent entreaties of friends, he came in 1778 from Geneva to Paris ; being then in his 84th year. On visiting the theatre he was greeted by a vast assemblage after the manner of the Athenians when crowning their dramatic poets. Assembled thousands bore him back to his hotel with acclamations. In the midst of this flattering incense, his feeble voice was heard saying, “ You are suffocating me with roses.” This was almost the closing scene of his fitful career ; he expired on May 30 of the same year, and was interred with the rites of Christian worship, a point concerning which he had expressed a strange solicitude.

This sorry legend ; which by chance we found *
Piled in a nook, through malice, as might seem, Among more innocent rubbish." Speaking thus,
With a brief notice when, and how, and where,
We had espied the book, he drew it forth,
And courteously, as if the act removed
At once all traces from the good man's heart
Of unbenign aversion or contempt,
Restored it to its owner. "Gentle friend"—
Herewith he grasp'd the Solitary's hand,—
"You have known better lights and guides than these—
Ah ! let not aught amiss within dispose
A noble mind to practise on herself,
And tempt opinion to support the wrongs
Of passion : whatsoe'er is felt or fear'd
From higher judgment-seats—make no appeal
To lower ! Can you question that the soul
Inherits an allegiance, not by choice
To be cast off, upon an oath proposed
By each new upstart notion ? In the ports
Of levity no refuge can be found,
No shelter, for a spirit in distress.
He who by wilful disesteem of life
And proud insensibility to hope,

* Voltaire's "Candide, or all for the best," a tale designed to throw ridicule on those views of Providence which represent all things as directly good. The refutation of Optimism in the "Candide," is both witty and triumphant. It has been observed by some one that Johnson's "Rasselas" and Voltaire's "Candide," have a striking resemblance in their general scope. Both prove the very large admixture of evil with good, in the world. The Frenchman intended by his philosophic wit to discredit religion, and by holding up to contempt one fanatical view of Providence, to destroy all faith in the doctrine. The English writer, intended, by shewing how unsatisfactory life often is, to train the hope and faith of man to eternity. As to Optimism, it secures no advantage which the doctrine of compensation wants, and it is open to the most dangerous moral conclusions. If "Whatever is, is right," there is no evil.

Affronts the eye of solitude, shall learn
That her mild nature can be terrible ;
That neither she nor silence lacks the power
T'avenge their own insulted majesty.
O blest seclusion ! when the mind admits
The law of duty ; and thereby can live
Through each vicissitude of loss and gain,
Link'd in entire complacence with her choice ;
When youth's presumptuousness is mellow'd down,
And manhood's vain anxiety dismiss'd ;
When wisdom shews her seasonable fruit,
Upon the boughs of sheltering leisure hung
In sober plenty ; when the spirit stoops
To drink with gratitude the crystal stream
Of unreprieved enjoyment ; and is pleased
To muse, and be saluted by the air
Of meek repentance, wafting wall-flower scents
From out the crumbling ruins of fallen pride
And chambers of transgression, now forlorn.
O calm, contented days and peaceful nights !
Who, when such good can be obtain'd, would strive
To reconcile his manhood to a couch
Soft, as may seem, but, under that disguise,
Stuff'd with the thorny substance of the past,
For fix'd annoyance ; and full oft beset
With floating dreams, disconsolate and black,
The vapoury phantoms of futurity ?

“ Within the soul a faculty abides,
That with interpositions, which would hide
And darken, so can deal, that they become Contingencies of pomp ; and serve to exalt
Her native brightness. As the ample moon,
In the deep stillness of a summer eve
Rising behind a thick and lofty grove,
Burns like an unconsuming fire of light
In the green trees ; and, kindling on all sides

Their leafy umbrage, turns the dusky veil
Into a substance glorious as her own,
Yea with her own incorporated, by power
Capacious and serene—like power abides
In man's celestial spirit; Virtue thus
Sets forth and magnifies herself; thus feeds
A calm, a beautiful, and silent fire,
From the encumbrances of mortal life,
From error, dissatisfaction—nay, from guilt;
And sometimes, so relenting Justice wills,
From palpable oppressions of despair."

The Solitary by these words was touch'd
With manifest emotion, and exclaim'd,
"But how begin—and whence?—'The mind is free—Resolve," the haughty moralist would say,
'This single act is all that we demand.'
Alas! such wisdom bids a creature fly,
Whose very sorrow is, that time hath shorn
His natural wing! To friendship let him turn
For succour; but perhaps he sits alone
On stormy waters, in a little boat
That holds but him, and can contain no more!
Religion tells of amity sublime
Which no condition can preclude; of One
Who sees all suffering, comprehends all wants,
All weakness fathoms, can supply all needs;
But is that bounty absolute? His gifts,
Are they not still, in some degree, rewards
For acts of service? Can His love extend
To hearts that own not Him? Will showers of grace,
When in the sky no promise may be seen,
Fall to refresh a parch'd and wither'd land?
Or shall the groaning spirit cast her load
At the Redeemer's feet?"

In rueful tone,
With some impatience in his mien he spake;

And this reply was given : —

“ As men from men

Do in the constitution of their souls
Differ, by mystery not to be explain'd ;
And as we fall by various ways, and sink
One deeper than another, self-condemn'd,
Through manifold degrees of guilt and shame,
So manifold and various are the ways
Of restoration, fashion'd to the steps
Of all infirmity, and tending all
To the same point, — attainable by all ;
Peace in ourselves, and union with our God.
For him to whom I speak an easy road
Lies open : we have heard from you a voice
At every moment soften'd in its course
By tenderness of heart ; have seen your eye,
Even like an altar lit by fire from heaven,
Kindle before us. Your discourse this day,
That, like the fabled Lethe, wish'd to flow
In creeping sadness, through oblivious shades
Of death and night, has caught at every turn
The colours of the sun. Access for you
Is yet preserved to principles of truth,
Which the imaginative will upholds
In seats of wisdom, not to be approach'd
By the inferior faculty that moulds,
With her minute and speculative pains,
Opinion, ever changing. I have seen
A curious child, who dwelt upon a tract
Of inland ground, applying to his ear
The convolutions of a smooth-lipp'd shell ;
To which, in silence hush'd, his very soul
Listen'd intensely ; and his countenance soon
Brighten'd with joy ; for murmurings from within
Were heard, — sonorous cadences ! whereby,
To his belief, the monitor express'd
Mysterious union with its native sea.

Even such a shell the universe itself
Is to the ear of faith ; and there are times,
I doubt not, when to you it doth impart
Authentic tidings of invisible things ;
Of ebb and flow, and ever-during power ;
And central peace, subsisting at the heart
Of endless agitation. Here you stand,
Adore, and worship, when you know it not ;
Pious beyond the intention of your thought,
Devout above the meaning of your will.
Yes, you have felt, and may not cease to feel.
The estate of man would be indeed forlorn,
In false conclusions of the reasoning power
Made the eye blind, and closed the passages
Through which the ear converses with the heart.
Has not the soul, the being of your life,
Received a shock of awful consciousness,
In some calm season, when these lofty rocks
At night's approach bring down the unclouded sky
To rest upon their circumambient walls ?
A temple framing of dimensions vast,
And yet not too enormous for the sound
Of human anthems, — choral song, or burst
Sublime of instrumental harmony,
To glorify the Eternal ! What if these
Did never break the stillness that prevails
Here — if the solemn nightingale be mute,
And the soft woodlark here did never chant
Her vespers — Nature fails not to provide Impulse and utterance. The whispering air
Sends inspiration from the shadowy heights
And blind recesses of the cavern'd rocks ;
The little rills, and waters numberless,
Inaudible by day-light, blend their notes
With the loud streams ; and often, at the hour
When issue forth the first pale stars, is heard,
Within the circuit of this fabric huge,

One voice — the solitary raven, flying *
Athwart the concave of the dark-blue dome,
Unseen, perchance above the power of sight —
An iron knell ! with echoes from afar,
Faint — and still fainter — as the cry, with which
The wanderer accompanies her flight
Through the calm region, fades upon the ear,
Diminishing by distance till it seem'd
To expire, yet from the abyss is caught again,
And yet again recover'd !

“ But descending
From these imaginative heights, that yield
Far-stretching views into eternity,
Acknowledge that to nature's humbler power
Your cherish'd sullenness is forced to bend
Even here, where her amenities are sown
With sparing hand. Then trust yourself abroad
To range her blooming bowers and spacious fields,
Where on the labours of the happy throng
She smiles, including in her wide embrace
City, and town, and tower, and sea with ships
Sprinkled ; be our companion while we track
Her rivers populous with gliding life ;
While, free as air, o'er printless sands we march,
And pierce the gloom of her majestic woods,
Roaming, or resting under grateful shade,

* It has been remarked that Wordsworth evinces throughout his writings, a most refined organic sensibility to the influence of sound, and indeed, that sounds and scenes were to him symbols, having their moral significances. These intimations abounding in his poems are considered by Mr. Hood, his biographer, “to unlock much of the apparent mystic hidden meaning of which it has been the fashion to speak in connection with the poet.” In reference to the passage here noted, Wordsworth stated that, “the mountains which enclosed the vale of Grasmere were particularly favourable to the reverberation of sound, and, that he had there frequently listened to the modifications which the voice of the raven underwent during its dusky flight.”

In peace and meditative cheerfulness :
Where living things, and things inanimate,
Do speak, at Heaven's command, to eye and ear,
And speak to social reason's inner sense,
With inarticulate language.

“ For the man,
Who, in this spirit, communes with the forms
Of Nature ; who, with understanding heart,
Doth know and love such objects as excite
No morbid passions, no disquietude,
No vengeance, and no hatred, needs must feel
So deeply, that unsatisfied with aught
Less pure and exquisite, he cannot choose
But seek for objects of a kindred love
In fellow-natures and a kindred joy.
Accordingly, he by degrees perceives
His feelings of aversion soften'd down ;
A holy tenderness pervade his frame.
His sanity of reason not impair'd,
Say rather, all his thoughts now flowing clear,
From a clear fountain flowing, he looks round
And seeks for good ; and finds the good he seeks ;
Until abhorrence and contempt are things
He only knows by name ; and if he hear
From other mouths, the language which they speak,
He is compassionate ; and has no thought,
No feeling, which can overcome his love.

“ And further ; by contemplating these forms
In the relations which they bear to man,
He shall discern, how, through the various means
Which silently they yield, are multiplied
The spiritual presences of absent things,
Convoked by knowledge ; and for his delight
Still ready to obey the gentle call.
Trust me, that for the instructed, time will come
When they shall meet no object but may teach

Some acceptable lesson to their minds
Of human suffering, or of human joy.
For them shall all things speak of man ; they read
Their duties in all forms ; and general laws,
And local accidents, shall tend alike
To rouse, to urge, and with the will confer
The ability to spread the blessings wide
Of true philanthropy. The light of love
Not failing, perseverance from their steps
Departing not, they shall at length obtain
The glorious habit by which sense is made
Subservient still to moral purposes,
Auxiliar to divine. That change shall clothe
The naked spirit, ceasing to deplore
The burthen of existence. Science then
Shall be a precious visitant ; and then,
And then, and only then, be worthy of her name.
For then her heart shall kindle ; her dull eye,
Dull and inanimate, no more shall hang
Chain'd to its object in brute slavery ;
But taught with patient interest to watch
The processes of things, and serve the cause
Of order and distinctness, not for this
Shall it forget that its most noble use,
Its most illustrious province, must be found
In furnishing clear guidance, a support
✓ Not treacherous, to the mind's excursive power.
So build we up the being that we are ;
Thus deeply drinking in the soul of things,
We shall be wise perforce ; and while inspired
By choice, and conscious that the will is free,
Unswerving shall we move, as if impell'd
By strict necessity, along the path
Of order and of good. Whate'er we see,
Whate'er we feel, by agency direct
Or indirect, shall tend to feed and nurse
Our faculties, shall fix in calmer seats

Of moral strength, and raise to loftier heights
Of love divine, our intellectual soul."

Here closed the sage that eloquent harangue,
Pour'd forth with fervour in continuous stream ;
Such as, remote, 'mid savage wilderness,
An Indian chief discharges from his breast
Into the hearing of assembled tribes,
In open circle seated round, and hush'd
As the unbreathing air, when not a leaf
Stirs in the mighty woods. So did he speak.
The words he utter'd shall not pass away ;
For they sank into me — the bounteous gift
Of one whom time and nature had made wise,
Gracing his language with authority
Which hostile spirits silently allow ;
Of one accustom'd to desires that feed
On fruitage gather'd from the tree of life ;
To hopes on knowledge and experience built,
Of one in whom persuasion and belief
Had ripen'd into faith, and faith become
A passionate intuition ; whence the soul,
Though bound to earth by ties of pity and love,
From all injurious servitude was free.

The sun, before his place of rest was reach'd,
Had yet to travel far, but unto us,
To us who stood low in that hollow dell,
He had become invisible, — a pomp
Leaving behind of yellow radiance spread
Upon the mountain-sides, in contrast bold
With ample shadows, seemingly no less
Than those resplendent lights, his rich bequest,
A dispensation of his evening power.
Adown the path which from the glen had led
The funeral train, the shepherd and his mate
Were seen descending ; forth in transport ran

Our little page ; the rustic pair approach ;
 And in the matron's aspect may be read
 A plain assurance that the words which told
 How that neglected pensioner was sent,
 Before his time, into a quiet grave,
 Had done to her humanity no wrong.
 But we are kindly welcomed ; promptly served
 With ostentatious zeal. Along the floor
 Of the small cottage in the lonely dell
 A grateful couch was spread for our repose ;
 Where, in the guise of mountaineers, we slept,
 Stretch'd upon fragrant heath, and lull'd by sound
 Of far-off torrents charming the still night,
 And to tired limbs and over-busy thoughts,
 Inviting sleep and soft forgetfulness.

THE PASTOR.

Farewell to the Valley — Reflections — Sight of a large and populous Vale — Solitary consents to go forward — Vale described — The Pastor's Dwelling, and some account of him — The Churchyard — Church and Monuments — The Solitary musing, and where — Roused — In the churchyard the Solitary communicates the thoughts which had recently passed through his mind — Lofty tone of the Wanderer's discourse of yesterday adverted to — Rite of Baptism, and the professions accompanying it, contrasted with the real state of human life — Inconsistency of the best men — Acknowledgement that practice falls far below the injunctions of duty as existing in the mind — General complaint of a falling-off in the value of life after the time of youth — Outward appearance of content and happiness in degree illusive — Pastor approaches — Appeal made to him — His answer — Wanderer in sympathy with him —

Suggestion that the least ambitious inquirers may be most free from error — The Pastor is desired to give some portraits of the living or dead from his own observations of life among these mountains — and for what purpose — Pastor consents — Mountain cottage — Excellent qualities of its inhabitants — Solitary expresses his pleasure ; but denies the praise of virtue to worth of this kind — Feelings of the Priest before he enters upon his account of persons interred in the churchyard — Graves of unbaptized Infants — What sensations they excite — Funereal and sepulchral observances — Whence — Ecclesiastical establishments — Whence derived — Profession of belief in the doctrine of immortality.

“FAREWELL, deep valley, with thy one rude house,
And its small lot of life-supporting fields
And guardian rocks ! With unreverted eyes
I cannot pass thy bounds, attractive seat !
To the still influx of the morning light
Open, and day's pure cheerfulness, but veil'd
From human observation, as if yet
Primeval forests wrapp'd thee round with dark
Impenetrable shade ; once more, farewell,
Majestic circuit, beautiful abyss !
By Nature destined from the birth of things
For quietness profound !”

Upon the side
Of that green slope, the outlet of the vale,
Lingering behind my comrades, thus I breath'd
A parting tribute to a spot that seem'd
Like the fix'd centre of a troubled world.
And now, pursuing leisurely my way,
“How vain,” thought I, “it is, by change of place
To seek that comfort which the mind denies ;
Yet trial and temptation oft are shunn'd
Wisely ; and by such tenure do we hold
Frail life's possessions, that even they whose fate
Yields no peculiar reason of complaint
Might, by the promise that is here, be won
To steal from active duties, and embrace

Obscurity, and calm forgetfulness.
Knowledge, methinks, in these disorder'd times,
Should be allow'd a privilege to have
Her anchorites, like piety of old ;
Men, who, from faction sacred, and unstain'd
By war, might, if so minded, turn aside
Uncensured, and subsist, a scatter'd few,
Living to God and nature, and content
With that communion. Consecrated be
The spots where such abide ! But happier still
The man, whom, furthermore, a hope attends
That meditation and research may guide
His privacy to principles and powers
Discover'd, or invented, or set forth,
Through his acquaintance with the ways of truth,
In lucid order ; so that, when his course
Is run, some faithful eulogist may say
He sought not praise — and praise did overlook
His unobtrusive merit ; but his life,
Sweet to himself, was exercised in good
That shall survive his name and memory."

Acknowledgments of gratitude sincere
Accompanied these musings ; fervent thanks
For my own peaceful lot and happy choice ;
A choice that from the passions of the world
Withdrew, and fix'd me in a still retreat,
Shelter'd but not to social duties lost,
Secluded, but not buried ; and with song
Cheering my days, and with industrious thought,
With the ever-welcome company of books,
By virtuous friendship's soul-sustaining aid,
And with the blessings of domestic love.

Thus occupied in mind I paced along,
Following the rugged road by sledge or wheel
Worn in the moorland, till I overtook

My two associates, in the morning sun
Halting together on a rocky knoll,
From which the road descended rapidly
To the green meadows of another vale.

Here did our pensive host put forth his hand
In sign of farewell. "Nay," the old man said,
"The fragrant air its coolness still retains ;
The herds and flocks are yet abroad to crop
The dewy grass ; you cannot leave us now,
We must not part at this inviting hour."
To that injunction, earnestly express'd,
He yielded, though reluctant ; for his mind
Instinctively disposed him to retire
To his own covert ; as a billow, heaved
Upon the beach, rolls back into the sea.
So we descend ; and winding round a rock,
Attain a point that shew'd the valley, stretch'd *
In length before us ; and, not distant far,
Upon a rising ground, a gray church-tower,
Whose battlements were screen'd by tufted trees.
And towards a crystal mere, that lay beyond,

* Quitting the cottage and Blea Tarn and crossing the ridge which hems in the Solitary's retreat in that direction, the poet and his companions descend into the vale of Little Langdale. Here, giving play to his imagination, he converts the large farmhouse which stands, embowered among yew trees, at the head of the dale, into a parsonage ; and then, by another wave of the magic wand, the vale of Langdale, its tarn, and the rude chapel which once stood there, are transmuted into the more stately and spacious vale of Grasmere and its ancient parish church. In describing the "Pastor," Wordsworth had no one individual in view, but, entertaining an opinion that it favoured "the beneficial influence of the Church of England that the patronage of its benefices should be attached to the estates of noble families of ancient gentry," he takes occasion here, to portray the character of a country gentleman, of aristocratic birth and connexions, brought by his pastoral office into close relation with the peasantry of his native district.

Among steep hills and woods embosom'd, flow'd
A copious stream with boldly-winding courses ;
Here traceable, there hidden, there again
To sight restored, and glittering in the sun.
On the stream's bank, and everywhere, appear'd
Fair dwellings, single, or in social knots,
Some scatter'd o'er the level, others perch'd
On the hill-sides, a cheerful quiet scene,
Now in its morning purity array'd.

“As 'mid some happy valley of the Alps,”
Said I, “once happy, ere tyrannic power,
Wantonly breaking in upon the Swiss,
Destroy'd their unoffending commonwealth,
A popular equality doth seem
Here to prevail ; and yet a house of state
Stands yonder, one beneath whose roof, methinks,
A rural lord might dwell.” “No feudal pomp,” Replied our friend, a chronicler who stood
Where'er he moved upon familiar ground —
“Nor feudal power is there ; but there abides,
In his allotted home, a genuine priest,
The shepherd of his flock ; or, as a king
Is styled, when most affectionately praised,
The father of his people — such is he ;
And rich and poor, and young and old, rejoice
Under his spiritual sway, collected round him
In this sequestered realm. He hath vouchsafed
To me some portion of his kind regard ;
And something also of his inner mind
Hath he imparted — but I speak of him
As he is known to all.

“The calm delights
Of unambitious piety he chose,
And learning's solid dignity ; though born
Of knightly race, not wanting powerful friends.
This good to reap, these pleasures to secure,

Hither, in prime of manhood, he withdrew
From academic bowers. He loved the spot —
Who does not love his native soil? — he prized
The ancient rural character, composed
Of simple manners, feelings unsuppress'd
And undisguised, and strong and serious thought :
A character reflected in himself,
With such embellishment as well beseems
His rank and sacred function. This deep vale
Is lengthen'd out by many a winding reach,
Not visible to us ; and one of these
A turreted manorial hall adorns,
In which the good man's ancestors have dwelt
From age to age, the patrons of this cure.
To them, and to his decorating hand,
The vicar's dwelling, and the whole domain,
Owes that presiding aspect which might well
Attract your notice ; statelier than could else
Have been bestow'd, in course of common chance,
On an unwealthy mountain benefice."

" This said, oft halting, we pursued our way ;
Nor reach'd the village church-yard till the sun,
Travelling at steadier pace than ours, had risen
Above the summits of the highest hills,
And round our path darted oppressive beams.

As chanced, the portals of the sacred pile
Stood open ; and we enter'd. On my frame,
At such transition from the fervid air,
A grateful coolness fell, that seem'd to strike
The heart, in concert with that temperate awe
Not framed to nice proportions was the pile, *

* The previous note renders it almost unnecessary to state that the church here described is that of Grasmere. Wordsworth, when dictating some remarks on this portion of the Excursion, laments that the rude antique majesty of the edifice should have

But large and massy, for duration built ;
With pillars crowded, and the roof upheld
By naked rafters intricately cross'd,
Like leafless underboughs in some thick grove,
All wither'd by the depth of shade above.
Admonitory texts inscribed the walls,
Each in its ornamental scroll enclosed ;
Each also crown'd with wingèd heads — a pair
Of rudely-painted cherubim. The floor
Of nave and aisle, in unpretending guise,
Was occupied by oaken benches ranged
In seemly rows ; the chancel only shew'd
Some inoffensive marks of earthly state
And vain distinction. A capacious pew
Of sculptured oak stood here, with drapery lined ;
And marble monuments were here display'd
Upon the walls ; and on the floor beneath
Sepulchral stones appear'd, with emblems graven, been impaired by the painting of the rafters, and by the removal of the old but appropriate oak benches. He also notices it as peculiar that the men and women sat on opposite sides of the church, but the custom we believe prevails elsewhere in the district. It afforded the poet pleasure to contemplate the time when the yew trees, by their growth, would shed a solemnity over the church-yard, and thus in some degree compensate for other changes which he deplored. Of these trees the following interesting particulars are given. Sir George Beaumont having sold the beautiful piece of water called Loughrigg Tarn, placed the purchase money, twenty pounds, at Wordsworth's disposal for any local purpose. Accordingly, he resolved to plant yew trees in the church-yard, and having caused fitting inclosures to be made he planted, principally with his own hand, the trees which now thrive so well there. "May the trees," he adds, "be taken care of when we are all gone, and some of them will perhaps, at some far distant time, rival the majesty of the yew at Lorton, and those which I have described as growing at Borrowdale, where they are still to be seen in grand assemblage." This wish of his, future generations will reverently obey, for his own honoured remains now repose under their shelter by the side of the murmuring Rothay.

And foot-worn epitaphs, and some with small
And shining effigies of brass inlaid.
The tribute by these various records claim'd,
Without reluctance did we pay ; and read
The ordinary chronicle of birth,
Office, alliance, and promotion — all
Ending in dust ; of upright magistrates,
Grave doctors strenuous for the mother church,
And uncorrupted senators, alike
To king and people true. A brazen plate,
Not easily decipher'd, told of one
Whose course of earthly honour was begun
In quality of page among the train
Of the eighth Henry, when he cross'd the seas
His royal state to shew, and prove his strength
In tournament upon the fields of France.
Another tablet register'd the death,
And praised the gallant bearing of a knight,
Tried in the sea-fights of the second Charles.
Near this brave knight his father lay entomb'd ;
And, to the silent language giving voice,
I read how, in his manhood's earlier day,
He, 'mid the afflictions of intestine war,
And rightful government subverted, found
One only solace, that he had espoused
A virtuous lady tenderly beloved
For her benign affections ; and for this
Yet more endear'd to him, that in her state
Of wedlock richly crown'd with Heaven's regard,
She with a numerous issue fill'd his house,
Who throve, like plants uninjured by the storm
That laid their country waste. No need to speak
Of less particular notices assign'd
To youth or maiden gone before their time,
And matrons and unwedded sisters old ;
Whose charity and goodness were rehearsed
In modest panegyric. " These dim lines,

What would they tell?" said I ; but, from the task
 Of puzzling out that faded narrative,
 With whisper soft my venerable friend
 Call'd me ; and, looking down the darksome aisle,
 I saw the tenant of that lonely vale
 Standing apart ; with curvèd arm reclined
 On the baptismal font ; his pallid face
 Upturn'd, as if his mind were rapt, or lost
 In some abstraction ; gracefully he stood,
 The semblance bearing of a sculptured form
 That leans upon a monumental urn
 In peace, from morn to night, from year to year.

Him from that posture did the sexton rouse ;
 Who enter'd, humming carelessly a tune, *
 Continuation haply of the notes
 That had beguiled the work from which he came,
 With spade and mattock o'er his shoulder hung ;
 To be deposited for future need
 In their appointed place. The pale Recluse
 Withdrew ; and straight we follow'd to a spot
 Where sun and shade were intermix'd ; for there
 A broad oak, stretching forth its leafy arms
 From an adjoining pasture overhung
 Small space of that green churchyard with a light
 And pleasant awning. On the moss-grown wall
 My ancient friend and I together took
 Our seats ; and thus the Solitary spake,
 Standing before us :—" Did you note the mien
 Of that self-solaced, easy-hearted churl,
 Death's hireling, who scoops out his neighbour's grave,
 Or wraps an old acquaintance up in clay,

* Hamlet. — Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave making.

Horatio. — Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Hamlet. — 'Tis e'en so : the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

As unconcern'd as when he plants a tree?
I was abruptly summon'd by his voice
From some affecting images and thoughts,
And from the company of serious words.
Much, yesterday, was said in glowing phrase
Of our sublime dependences, and hopes
For future states of being ; and the wings
Of speculation, joyfully outspread,
Hover'd above our destiny on earth ;
But stoop, and place the prospect of the soul
In sober contrast with reality
And man's substantial life. If this mute earth
Of what it holds could speak, and every grave
Were as a volume, shut, yet capable
Of yielding its contents to eye and ear,
We should recoil, stricken with sorrow and shame,
To see disclosed, by such dread proof, how ill
That which is done accords with what is known
To reason, and by conscience is enjoin'd ;
How idly, how perversely, life's whole course,
To this conclusion deviates from the line,
Or of the end stops short, proposed to all
At its aspiring outset. Mark the babe
Not long accusom'd to this breathing world ;
One that hath barely learn'd to shape a smile,
Though yet irrational of soul, to grasp
With tiny fingers — to let fall a tear ;
And, as the heavy cloud of sleep dissolves,
To stretch his limbs, bemocking, as might seem,
The outward functions of intelligent man ;
A grave proficient in amusing feats
Of puppetry, that from the lap declare
His expectations, and announce his claims
To that inheritance which millions rue
That they were born to ! In due time
A day of solemn ceremonial comes ;
When they, who for this minor hold in trust

Rights that transcend the humblest heritage
 Of mere humanity, present their charge,
 For this occasion daintily adorn'd,
 At the baptismal font. And when the pure
 And consecrating element hath cleansed
 The original stain, the child is there received
 Into the second ark, Christ's Church, with trust
 That he, from wrath redeem'd, therein shall float
 Over the billows of this troublesome world,
 To the fair land of everlasting life.
 Corrupt affections, covetous desires,
 Are all renounced ; high as the thought of man
 Can carry virtue, virtue is profess'd ;
 A dedication made, a promise given
 For due provision to control and guide,
 And unremitting progress to insure
 In holiness and truth."

"You cannot blame,"

Here interposing, fervently I said,
 "Rites which attest that man by nature lies Bedded for good and evil in a gulf
 Fearfully low ; nor will your judgment scorn
 Those services whereby attempt is made
 To lift the creature towards that eminence
 On which, now fallen, erewhile in majesty
 He stood ; or if not so, whose top serene
 At least, he feels 'tis given him to descry ;
 Not without aspirations evermore
 Returning, and injunctions from within Doubt to cast off and weariness ; in trust
 That what the soul perceives, if glory lost,
 May be, through pains and persevering hope,
 Recover'd ; or if hitherto unknown,
 Lies within reach, and one day shall be gain'd."

"I blame them not," he calmly answer'd. "No,
 The outward ritual and establish'd forms

With which communities of men invest
These inward feelings, and th' aspiring views
To which the lips give public utterance,
Are both a natural process, and by me
Shall pass uncensured ; though the issue prove,
Bringing from age to age its own reproach,
Incongruous, impotent, and blank. But oh !
If to be weak is to be wretched — miserable,
As the lost angel by a human voice
Hath mournfully pronounced, then, in my mind,
Far better not to move at all than move
By impulse sent from such illusive power, —
That finds and cannot fasten down ; that grasps
And is rejoiced, and loses while it grasps ;
That tempts, emboldens, — doth a while sustain,
And then betrays ; accuses and inflicts
Remorseless punishment ; and so retreads
Th' inevitable circle ; better far
Than this, to graze the herb in thoughtless peace,
By foresight or remembrance undisturb'd !

“ Philosophy ! and thou, more vaunted name,
Religion ! with thy statelier retinue,
Faith, Hope, and Charity — from the visible world
Choose for your emblems whatsoe'er ye find
Of safest guidance and of firmest trust —
The torch, the star, the anchor — nor except
The cross itself, at whose unconscious feet
The generations of mankind have knelt
Ruefully seized, and shedding bitter tears,
And through that conflict seeking rest — of you,
High-titled powers, am I constrain'd to ask,
Here standing, with th' unvoyageable sky
In faint reflection of infinitude,
Stretch'd overhead, and at my pensive feet
A subterraneous magazine of bones,
In whose dark vaults my own shall soon be laid,

Where are your triumphs—your dominion where—
 And in what age admitted and confirm'd?
 Not for a happy land do I inquire,
 Island or grove, that hides a blessèd few
 Who, with obedience willing and sincere,
 To your serene authorities conform;
 But whom, I ask, of individual souls,
 Have ye withdrawn from passion's crooked ways,
 Inspired, and thoroughly fortified? If the heart
 Could be inspected to its inmost folds
 By sight undazzled with the glare of praise,
 Who shall be named—in the resplendent line
 Of sages, martyrs, confessors—the man
 Whom the best might of conscience, truth, and hope,
 For one day's little compass, has preserved
 From painful and discreditable shocks
 Of contradiction, from some vague desire
 Culpably cherish'd, or corrupt relapse
 To some unsanction'd fear?"

"If this be so,
 And man," said I, "be in his noblest shape
 Thus pitiably infirm; then, He who made,
 And who shall judge the creature, will forgive.
 Yet, in its general tenor, your complaint
 Is all too true; and surely not misplaced;
 For, from this pregnant spot of ground, such thoughts
 Rise to the notice of a serious mind
 By natural exhalation. With the dead
 In their repose, the living in their mirth,
 Who can reflect, unmoved, upon the round
 Of smooth and solemnized complacencies,
 By which, in Christian lands from age to age
 Profession mocks performance. Earth is sick,
 And Heaven is weary, of the hollow words
 Which states and kingdoms utter when they talk
 Of truth and justice. Turn to private life
 And social neighbourhood; look we to ourselves;

A light of duty shines on every day
For all ; and yet how few are warm'd or cheer'd !
How few who mingle with their fellow-men
And still remain self-govern'd, and apart,
Like this our honour'd friend ; and thence acquire
Right to expect his vigorous decline,
That promises to th' end a blest old age !”

“ Yet,” with a smile of triumph, thus exclaim'd
The Solitary, “ in the life of man,
If to the poetry of common speech
Faith may be given, we see as in a glass
A true reflection of the circling year,
With all its seasons. Grant that spring is there,
In spite of many a rough untoward blast,
Hopeful and promising with buds and flowers ;
Yet where is glowing summer's long rich day,
That ought to follow, faithfully express'd ?
And mellow autumn, charged with bounteous fruit,
Where is she imaged—in what favour'd clime
Her lavish pomp and ripe magnificence ?
Yet, while the better part is miss'd, the worse
In man's autumnal season is set forth
With a resemblance not to be denied,
And that contents him ; bowers that hear no more
The voice of gladness, less and less supply
Of outward sunshine and internal warmth :
And, with this change, sharp air and falling leaves,
Foretelling total winter, blank and cold.

“ How gay the habitations that adorn
This fertile valley ! Not a house but seems
To give assurance of content within,
Embosom'd happiness and placid love ;
As if the sunshine of the day were met
With answering brightness in the hearts of all
Who walk this favour'd ground. But chance regards,

And notice forced upon incurious ears,
These, if these only, acting in despite
Of the encomiums by my friend pronounced
On humble life, forbid the judging mind
To trust the smiling aspect of this fair
And noiseless commonwealth. The simple race
Of mountaineers, by nature's self removed
From foul temptations, and by constant care
Of a good shepherd tended, as themselves
Do tend their flocks, these share man's general lot
With little mitigation. They escape,
Perchance, guilt's heavier woes ; and do not feel
The tedium of fantastic idleness ;
Yet life, as with the multitude, with them
Is fashion'd like an ill-constructed tale
That on the outset wastes its gay desires,
Its fair adventures, its enlivening hopes,
And pleasant interests — for the sequel leaving
Old things repeated with diminish'd grace,
And all the labour'd novelties, at best
Imperfect substitutes, whose use and power
Evince the want and weakness whence they spring."

While in this serious mood we held discourse,
The reverend Pastor toward the churchyard gate
Approach'd ; and, with a mild respectful air
Of native cordiality, our friend
Advanced to greet him. With a gracious mien
Was he received, and mutual joy prevail'd.
A while they stood in conference, and I guess
That he, who now upon the mossy wall
Sate by my side, had vanish'd, if a wish
Could have transferr'd him to his lonely house
Within the circuit of those guardian rocks.
For me, I look'd upon the pair, well-pleased
Nature had framed them both, and both were mark'd
By circumstance with intermixture fine

Of contrast and resemblance. To an oak
Hardy and grand, a weather-beaten oak,
Fresh in the strength and majesty of age,
One might be liken'd : flourishing appear'd,
Though somewhat past the fulness of his prime,
The other — like a stately sycamore,
That spreads, in gentler pomp, its honey'd shade.

A general greeting was exchanged ; and soon
The Pastor learn'd that his approach had given
A welcome interruption to discourse
Grave, and in truth full often sad. “ Is man
A child of hope ? Do generations press
On generations, without progress made ?
Halts the individual, ere his hairs be gray,
Perforce ? Are we a creature in whom good Preponderates, or evil ? Doth the will Acknowledge reason's law ? A living power
Is virtue, — or no better than a name —
Fleeting as health or beauty, and unsound ?
So that the only substance which remains,
(For thus the tenor of complaint hath run),
Among so many shadows, are the pains
And penalties of miserable life,
Doom'd to decay, and then expire in dust !
Our cogitations this way have been drawn,
These are the points,” the Wanderer said, “ on which Our inquest turns. Accord, good sir, the light
Of your experience, to dispel this gloom.
By your persuasive wisdom shall the heart
That frets, or languishes, be still'd and cheer'd.”

“ Our nature,” said the Priest, in mild reply,
“ Angels may weigh and fathom : they perceive,
With undistemper'd and unclouded spirit,
The object as it is ; but for ourselves,
That speculative height we may not reach.

The good and evil are our own ; and we
Are that which we would contemplate from far.
Knowledge, for us, is difficult to gain —
Is difficult to gain, and hard to keep —
As virtue's self ; like virtue is beset
With snares ; tried, tempted, subject to decay.
Love, admiration, fear, desire, and hate,
Blind were we without these ; through these alone
Are capable to notice or discern,
Or to record ! we judge, but cannot be Indifferent judges. 'Spite of proudest boast,
Reason, best reason, is t' imperfect man
An effort only, and a noble aim ;
A crown, an attribute of sovereign power,
Still to be courted — never to be won.
Look forth, or each man dive into himself,
What sees he, but a creature too perturb'd,
That is transported to excess ; that yearns,
Regrets, or trembles, wrongly, or too much ;
Hopes rashly, in disgust as rash recoils ;
Battens on spleen, or moulders in despair.
Thus truth is miss'd, and comprehension fails ;
And darkness and delusion round our path
Spread, from disease, whose subtle injury lurks
Within the very faculty of sight.

“ Yet for the general purposes of faith
In Providence, for solace and support,
We may not doubt that who can best subject
The will to reason's law, can strictliest live
And act in that obedience, he shall gain
The clearest apprehension of those truths,
Which unassisted reason's utmost power
Is too infirm to reach. But, waiving this,
And our regards confining within bounds
Of less exalted consciousness, through which
The very multitude are free to range,

We safely may affirm that human life
Is either fair or tempting, a soft scene
Grateful to sight, refreshing to the soul,
Or a forbidden tract of cheerless view ;
Even as the same is look'd at or approach'd.
Permit me," said the Priest, continuing, " here
To use an illustration of my thought,
Drawn from the very spot on which we stand.
In changeful April, when, as he is wont,
Winter has reassumed a short-lived sway
And whiten'd all the surface of the fields,
If, from the sullen region of the north,
Towards the circuit of this holy ground,
Your walk conducts you, ere the vigorous sun,
High climbing, hath attain'd his noon-tide height,
These mounds, transversely lying side by side
From east to west, before you will appear
A dreary plain of unillumined snow,
With more than wintry cheerlessness and gloom
Saddening the heart. Go forward and look back ;
On the same circuit of this churchyard ground
Look, from the quarter whence the lord of light,
Of life, of love, and gladness, doth dispense
His beams, which, unexcluded in their fall,
Upon the southern side of every grave
Have gently exercised a melting power,
Then will a vernal prospect, greet your eye,
All fresh and beautiful, and green and bright,
Hopeful and cheerful — vanish'd is the snow,
Vanish'd or hidden ; and the whole domain,
To some, too lightly minded, might appear
A meadow carpet for the dancing hours.
This contrast, not unsuitable to life,
Is to that other state more apposite,
Death, and its twofold aspect ; wintry one,
Cold, sullen, blank, from hope and joy shut out —
The other, which the ray divine hath touch'd,

Replete with vivid promise, bright as spring."

"We see, then, as we feel," the Wanderer thus
With a complacent animation spake,
"And in your judgment, sir, the mind's repose
On evidence is not to be insured
By act of naked reason. Moral truth
Is no mechanic structure, built by rule ;
And which, once built, retains a steadfast shape
And undisturb'd proportions ; but a thing
Subject you deem to vital accidents ;
And, like the water-lily, lives and thrives,
Whose root is fixed in stable earth, whose head
Floats on the tossing waves. With joy sincere
I resalute these sentiments, confirm'd
By your authority. But how acquire
The inward principle that gives effect
To outward argument, the passive will
Meek to admit, the active energy,
Strong and unbounded to embrace, and firm
To keep and cherish — how shall man unite
A self-forgetting tenderness of heart
And earth-despising dignity of soul —
Wise in that union, and without it blind ?"

"The way," said I, "to court, if not obtain
The ingenuous mind, apt to be set aright,
This, in the lonely dell discoursing, you
Declared at large ; and by what exercise
From visible nature or the inner self Power may be train'd, and renovation brought
To those who need the gift. But, after all,
Is aught so certain as that man is doom'd
To breathe beneath a vault of ignorance —
The natural roof of that dark house in which
His soul is pent ? How little can be known !
This is the wise man's sigh ; how far we err —

This is the good man's not unfrequent pang.
And they perhaps err least, the lowly class
Whom a benign necessity compels
To follow reason's least ambitious course ;
Such do I mean, who, unperplex'd by doubt
And unincited by a wish to look
Into high objects further than they may,
Pace to and fro, from morn till eventide,
The narrow avenue of daily toil,
For daily bread."

"Yes," buoyantly exclaim'd
The pale Recluse — "praise to the sturdy plough,
And patient spade and shepherd's simple crook,
And ponderous loom resounding while it holds
Body and mind in one captivity ;
And let the light mechanic tool be hail'd
With honour, which, encasing by the power
Of long companionship, the artist's hand,
Cuts off that hand, with all its world of nerves,
From a too busy commerce with the heart !
Inglorious implements of craft and toil,
Both ye that shape and build, and ye that force,
By slow solicitation, earth to yield
Her annual bounty sparingly dealt forth
With wise reluctance, you would I extol
Not for gross good alone which ye produce,
But for the impertinent and ceaseless strife
Of proofs and reasons ye preclude — in those Who to your dull society are born,
And with their humble birthright rest content,
Would I had ne'er renounced it !"

A slight flush
Of moral anger previously had tinged
The old man's cheek ; but at this closing turn
Of self-reproach, it pass'd away. Said he

“That which we feel we utter : as we think
So have we argued ; reaping for our pains
No visible recompence. For our relief,
You,” to the Pastor turning, thus he spake,
“Have kindly interposed. May I entreat
Your further help ? The mine of real life
Dig for us ; and present us, in the shape
Of virgin ore, that gold which we by pains
Fruitless as those of aery alchemists,
Seek from the torturing crucible. There lies
Around us a domain where you have long
Held spiritual sway, have guided and consoled,
And watch’d the outward course and inner heart.
Give us, for our abstractions, solid facts ;
For our disputes, plain pictures. Say what man
He is who cultivates yon hanging field ;
What qualities of mind she bears, who comes,
For morn and evening service, with her pail,
To that green pasture ; place before our sight
The family who dwell within yon house
Fenced round with glittering laurel ; or in that Below, from which the curling smoke ascends.
Or rather, as we stand on holy earth,
And have the dead around us, take from them
Your instances ; for they are both best known,
And by frail man most equitably judged.
Epitomize the life ; pronounce, you can,
Authentic epitaphs on some of these
Who, from their lowly mansions hither brought,
Beneath this turf lie mouldering at our feet.
So, by your records, may our doubts be solved ;
And so, not searching higher, we may learn
To prize the breath we share with human kind,
And look upon the dust of man with awe.”

The Priest replied : — “An office you impose
For which peculiar requisites are mine ;

Yet much, I feel, is wanting — else the task
Would be most grateful. True indeed it is That they whom death has hidden from our sight
Are worthiest of the mind's regard ; with these
The future cannot contradict the past :
Mortality's last exercise and proof
Is undergone ; the transit made that shews
The very soul, reveal'd as it departs.
Yet, on your first suggestion, will I give,
Ere we descend into these silent vaults,
One picture from the living.

“ You behold,
High on the breast of yon dark mountain, dark
With stony barrenness, a shining speck
Bright as a sunbeam sleeping till a shower
Brush it away, or cloud pass over it ;
And such it might be deem'd — a sleeping sunbeam ;
But 'tis a plot of cultivated ground,
Cut off, an island in the dusky waste ;
And that attractive brightness is its own.
The lofty site, by Nature framed, to tempt,
Amid a wilderness of rocks and stones,
The tiller's hand, a hermit might have chosen,
For opportunity presented thence
Far forth to send his wandering eye o'er land
And ocean, and look down upon the works,
The habitations, and the ways of men,
Himself unseen. But no tradition tells
That ever hermit dipp'd his maple dish
In the sweet spring that lurks 'mid yon green fields ;
And no such visionary views belong
To those who occupy and till the ground,
And on the bosom of the mountain dwell —
A wedded pair in childless solitude.
A house of stones collected on the spot,
By rude hands built, with rocky knolls in front,
Back'd also by a ledge of rock, whose crest

Of birch-trees waves above the chimney-top ;
In shape, in size, and colour, an abode
Such as in unsafe times of Border war
Might have been wish'd for and contrived, to elude
The eye of roving plunderer — for their need
Suffices ; and unshaken bears the assault
Of their most dreaded foe, the strong south-west,
In anger blowing from the distant sea.
Alone within her solitary hut ;
There, or within the compass of her fields,
At any moment may the dame be found,
True as the stock-dove to her shallow nest
And to the grove that holds it. She beguiles
By intermingled work of house and field
The summer's day, and winter's ; with success
Not equal, but sufficient to maintain,
Even at the worst, a smooth stream of content,
Until the expected hour at which her mate
From the far-distant quarry's vault returns,
And by his converse crowns a silent day
With evening cheerfulness. In powers of mind,
In scale of culture, few among my flock
Hold lower rank than this sequester'd pair :
But humbleness of heart descends from heaven :
And that best gift of Heav'n hath fall'n on them —
Abundant recompence for every want.
Stoop from your height, ye proud, and copy these !
Who, in their noiseless dwelling-place, can hear
The voice of wisdom whispering Scripture texts
For the mind's government, or temper's peace ;
And recommending for their mutual need,
Forgiveness, patience, hope, and charity !”

“Much was I pleased,” the gray-hair'd Wanderer said
“When to those shining fields our notice first
You turn'd ; and yet more pleased have from your lips
Gather'd this fair report of those who dwell

In that retirement ; whither, by such course
Of evil hap and good as oft awaits
A lone wayfaring man, I once was brought.
Dark on my road the autumnal evening fell
While I was traversing yon mountain-pass,
And night succeeded with unusual gloom,
So that my feet and hands at length became Guides better than mine eyes — until a light
High in the gloom appear'd, too high, methought,
For human habitation ; but I long'd
To reach it, destitute of other hope.
I look'd with steadiness as sailors look
On the north star, or watch-tower's distant lamp,
And saw the light, now fix'd, and shifting now,
Not like a dancing meteor, but in line
Of never-varying motion, to and fro.
'It is no night-fire of the naked hills,'
Said I — 'some friendly covert must be near.'
With this persuasion thitherward my steps
I turn, and reach at last the guiding light ;
Joy to myself ! but to the heart of her
Who there was standing on the open hill
(The same kind matron whom your tongue hath praised)
Alarm and disappointment ! The alarm
Ceased, when she learn'd through what mishap I came
And by what help had gain'd those distant fields.
Drawn from her cottage, on that open height,
Bearing a lantern in her hand she stood,*

* The entire picture here drawn from nature and real life, gives a faithful representation of a worthy couple, Jonathan and Betty Yewdale, who dwelt in a cottage called Hackett, standing on the southern extremity of the ridge which divides the two Langdales. Wordsworth became intimately acquainted with them from the circumstance of some of his children having been placed under their care after an illness which required change of air : and the family were in the habit of going there to drink tea on fine summer afternoons. This friendly intercourse afforded him an insight to the characters, habits, and lives of these good, and as he terms them, "in the main, wise people."

Or paced the ground, to guide her husband home
By that unwearied signal, kenn'd afar ;
An anxious duty ! which the lofty site,
Far from all public road or beaten way,
And traversed only by a few faint paths,
Imposes, whensoever untoward chance
(Such chance is rare) detains him till the night
Falls black upon the hills. ' But come,' she said,
' Come, let me lead you to our poor abode :
Behind those rocks it stands, as if it shunn'd,
In churlishness, the eye of all mankind ;
But the few guests that seek the door receive
Most hearty welcome.' Entering I beheld
A blazing fire — beside a clean hearth.
Sate down ; and to her office, with leave ask'd
The dame return'd. Before that glowing pile
Of mountain turf required the builder's hand
Its wasted splendour to repair, the door
Open'd and she re-enter'd with glad looks,
Her helpmate following. Hospitable fare,
Frank conversation, made the evening's treat :
Need a bewilder'd traveller wish for more ?
But more was given ; the eye, the mind, the heart,
Found exercise in noting as we sate
By the bright fire, the good man's face — composed
Of features elegant ; an open brow
Of undisturb'd humanity ; a cheek
Suffused with something of a feminine hue ;
Eyes beaming courtesy and mild regard ;
But, in the quicker turns of the discourse,
Expression slowly varying, that evinced
A tardy apprehension. From a fount
Lost, thought I, in the obscurities of time,
But honour'd once, these features and that mien
May have descended, though I see them here.
In such a man, so gentle and subdued,
Withal so graceful in his gentleness,

A race illustrious for heroic deeds,
Humbled, but not degraded, may expire.
This pleasing fancy (cherish'd and upheld
By sundry recollections of such fall
From high to low, ascent from low to high,
As books record, and even the careless mind
Cannot but notice among men and things)
Went with me to the place of my repose.

“ Roused by the crowing cock at dawn of day,
I yet had risen too late to interchange
A morning salutation with my host,
Gone forth already to the far-off seat
Of his day's work. ‘ Three dark mid-winter months
Pass,’ said the matron, ‘ and I never see,
Save when the Sabbath brings its kind release,
My helpmate's face by light of day. He quits
His door in darkness, nor till dusk returns.
And, through Heaven's blessing, thus we gain the bread
For which we pray ; and for the wants provide
Of sickness, accident, and helpless age.
Companions have I many ; many friends,
Dependents, comforters : my wheel, my fire,
All day the house-clock ticking in mine ear,
The cackling hen, the tender chicken brood,
And the wild birds that gather round my porch.
This honest sheep-dog's countenance I read ;
With him can talk ; nor seldom waste a word
On creatures less intelligent and shrewd.
And if the blustering wind that drives the clouds,
Care not for me, he lingers round my door,
And makes me pastime when our tempers suit :
But, above all, my thoughts are my support.’
The matron ended, nor could I forbear
To exclaim, ‘ O happy ! yielding to the law
Of these privations, richer in the main ;
While thankless thousands are oppress'd and clogg'd

By ease and leisure ; by the very wealth
 And pride of opportunity made poor ;
 While tens of thousands falter in their path,
 And sink, through utter want of cheering light ;
 For you the hours of labour do not flag ;
 For you each evening hath its shining star,
 And every Sabbath-day its golden-sun.' ”

“ Yes ! ” said the Solitary, with a smile
 That seem'd to break from an expanding heart ;
 “ The untutor'd bird may found, and so construct,
 And with such soft materials line, her nest,
 Fix'd in the centre of a prickly brake,
 That the thorns wound her not ; they only guard
 Powers, not unjustly liken'd to those gifts
 Of happy instinct which the woodland bird
 Shares with her species, Nature's grace sometimes
 Upon the individual doth confer,
 Among the higher creatures born and train'd,
 To use of reason. And I own, that, tired
 Of the ostentatious world — a swelling stage,
 With empty actions and vain passions stuff'd,
 And from the private struggles of mankind
 Hoping for less than I could wish to hope,
 Far less than once I trusted and believed —
 I love to hear of those who, not contending
 Nor summon'd to contend for virtue's prize,
 Miss not the humbler good at which they aim ;
 Bless'd with a kindly faculty to blunt
 The edge of adverse circumstance, and turn
 Into their contraries the petty plagues
 And hindrances with which they stand beset.
 In early youth, among my native hills,
 I knew a Scottish peasant who possess'd
 A few small crofts of stone-encumber'd ground ;
 Masses of every shape and size, that lay
 Scatter'd about beneath the mould'ring walls

Of a rough precipice ; and some, apart,
In quarters unobnoxious to such chance,
As if the moon had shower'd them down in spite :
But he repined not. Though the plough was scared
By these obstructions, 'Round the shady stones
A fertilizing moisture,' said the swain,
'Gathers, and is preserved ; and feeding dews
And damps, through all the droughty summer day
From out their substance issuing, maintain
Herbage that never fails : no grass springs up
So green, so fresh, so plentiful as mine !'
See, in this well-condition'd soul, a third
To match with your good couple, that put forth
Their homely graces on the mountain side.
But thinly sown these natures ; rare, at least,
The mutual aptitude of seed and soil
That yields such kindly product. He, whose bed
Perhaps yon loose sods cover, the poor pensioner
Brought yesterday from our sequester'd dell
Here to lie down in lasting quiet, he,
If living now, could otherwise report
Of rustic loneliness ; that gray-hair'd orphan —
So call him, for humanity to him
No parent was — could feelingly have told,
In life, in death, what solitude can breed
Of selfishness, and cruelty, and vice ;
Or, if it breed not, hath not power to cure.
But your compliance, sir, with our request
My words too long have hinder'd."

Undeterr'd,
Perhaps incited, rather, by these shocks,
In no ungracious opposition, given
To the confiding spirit of his own
Experienced faith, the reverend Pastor said,
Around him looking : "Where shall I begin?
Who shall be first selected from my flock,

Gather'd together in their peaceful fold?"
He paused, and having lifted up his eyes
To the pure heaven, he cast them down again
Upon the earth beneath his feet, and spake:—

“To a mysteriously consorted pair
This place is consecrate; to death and life,
And to the best affections that proceed
From their conjunction. Consecrate to faith
In Him who bled for man upon the cross,
Hallow'd to revelation, and no less
To reason's mandates, and the hopes divine
Of pure imagination; above all,
To charity and love, that have provided,
Within these precincts, a capacious bed
And receptacle, open to the good
And evil, to the just and the unjust,
In which they find an equal resting-place;
Even as the multitude of kindred brooks
And streams, whose murmur fills this hollow vale,
Whether their course be turbulent or smooth,
Their waters clear or sullied, all are lost
Within the bosom of yon crystal lake,
And end their journey in the same repose.

“And blest are they who sleep; and we that know,
While in a spot like this we breathe and walk,
That all beneath us by the wings are cover'd
Of motherly humanity, outspread
And gathering all within their tender shade,
Though loath and slow to come. A battle-field,
In stillness left, when slaughter is no more.
With this compared is a strange spectacle!
A rueful sight, the wild shore strewn with wrecks,
And trod by people in afflicted quest
Of friends and kindred, whom the angry sea
Restores not to their prayers! Ah, who would think

That all the scatter'd subjects which compose
Earth's melancholy vision through the space
Of all her climes, — these wretched, these depraved,
To virtue lost, insensible of peace,
From the delights of charity cut off,
To pity dead, the oppressor and the oppress'd, —
Tyrants who utter the destroying word,
And slaves who will consent to be destroy'd,
Were of one species with the sheltered few,
Who, with a dutiful and tender hand,
Did lodge, in an appropriated spot,
This file of infants ; some that never breathed
The vital air ; and others, who, allow'd
That privilege, did yet expire too soon,
Or with too brief a warning, to admit
Administration of the holy rite
That lovingly consigns the babe to th' arms
Of Jesus, and His everlasting care.
These, that in trembling hope are laid apart ;
And the besprinkled nursling, unrequired
Till he begins to smile upon the breast
That feeds him ; and the tott'ring little one,
Taken from air and sunshine when the rose
Of infancy first blooms upon his cheek ;
The thinking, thoughtless schoolboy ; the bold youth,
Of soul impetuous, and the bashful maid
Smitten with all the promises of life
Are opening round her ; those of middle age,
Cast down while confident in strength they stand,
Like pillars fix'd more firmly, as might seem,
And more secure, by very weight of all
That, for support, rests on them ; the decay'd
And burthensome ; and, lastly, that poor few
Whose light of reason is with age extinct ;
The hopeful and the hopeless, first and last,
The earliest summon'd and the longest spared, —
Are here deposited, with tribute paid

Various ; but unto each some tribute paid,
 As if, amid these peaceful hills and groves,
 Society were touch'd with kind concern,
 And gentle 'Nature grieved that one should die ;'
 Or, if the change demanded no regret,
 Observed the liberating stroke — and bless'd.
 And whence that tribute — wherefore these regards ?
 Not from the naked heart alone of man
 (Though framed to high distinction upon earth
 As the sole spring and fountain-head of tears,
 His own peculiar utterance for distress
 Or gladness) — No," the Philosophic Priest
 Continued, "'tis not in the vital seat
 Of feeling to produce them, without aid
 ? From the pure soul, and the soul sublime and pure ;
 With her two faculties of eye and ear, —
 The one by which a creature, whom his sins
 Have render'd prone, can upward look to heaven —
 The other, that empowers him to perceive
 The voice of Deity, on height and plain,
 Whisp'ring those truths in stillness, which the Word
 To the four quarters of the winds proclaims.
 Not without such assistance could the use
 Of these benign observances prevail.
 Thus are they born, thus foster'd and maintain'd ;
 And, by the care prospective of our wise
 Forefathers, who, to guard against the shocks,
 The fluctuation and decay of things
 Embodied and establish'd these high truths
 In solemn institutions : men convinced
 That life is love and immortality,
 The being one, and one the element.
 There lies the channel and original bed,
 ? From the beginning hollow'd and scoop'd
 For man's affections — else betray'd and lost,
 And swallow'd up 'mid deserts infinite !
 This is the genuine course, the aim, and end

Of prescient reason ; all conclusions else
 Are abject, vain, presumptuous, and perverse.
 The faith partaking of those holy times,
 Life, I repeat, is energy of love,
 Divine or human, exercised in pain,
 In strife, and tribulation, and ordain'd,
 If so approved and sanctified, to pass,
 Through shades and silent rest, to endless joy !”

THE CHURCHYARD AMONG THE MOUNTAINS.

Poet's address to the State and Church of England — The Pastor not inferior to the ancient worthies of the Church — He begins his narratives with an instance of unrequited love — Anguish of mind subdued — And how — The lonely miner an instance of perseverance, which leads by contrast to an example of abused talents, irresolution and weakness — Solitary, applying this covertly to his own case, asks for an instance of some stranger whose dispositions may have led him to end his days here — Pastor, in answer, gives an account of the harmonising influence of solitude on two men of opposite principles, who had encountered agitations in public life — The rule by which peace may be obtained expressed — And where — Solitary hints at an overpowering Fatality — Answer of the Pastor — What subjects he will exclude from his narrative ; conversation upon this — Instance of an unamiable character, a female — And why given — Contrasted with this, a meek sufferer, from unguarded and betrayed love — Instance of heavier guilt — And its consequences to the offender — With this instance of a marriage contract broken is contrasted one of a widower, evincing his faithful affection towards his deceased wife by his care of their female children — Second marriage of widower prudential and happy.

HAIL to the crown by freedom shaped to gird
An English sovereign's brow — and to the throne
Whereon he sits ! whose deep foundations lie
In veneration and the people's love ;
Whose steps are equity, whose seat is law.
Hail to the State of England ! And conjoin
With this a salutation as devout,
Made to the spiritual fabric of her Church ;
Founded in truth ; by blood of martyrdom
Cemented ; by the hands of wisdom rear'd
In beauty of holiness, with order'd pomp,
Decent and unreprieved. The voice, that greets
The majesty of both, shall pray for both ;
That mutually protected and sustain'd,
They may endure as long as sea surrounds
This favour'd land, or sunshine warms her soil.
And oh, ye swelling hills, and spacious plains !
Besprent from shore to shore with steeple-towers,
And spires whose " silent finger points to heaven ;"
Nor wanting, at wide intervals, the bulk
Of ancient minster, lifted above the cloud
Of the dense air which town or city breeds
To intercept the sun's glad beams — ne'er may
That true succession fail of English hearts,
That can perceive, not less than heretofore,
Our ancestors did feelingly perceive,
What in those holy structures ye possess
Of ornamental interest, and the charm
Of pious sentiment diffused afar,
And human charity, and social love.
Thus never shall th' indignities of time
Approach their reverend graces unopposed ;
Nor shall the elements be free to hurt
Their fair proportions ; nor the blinder rage
Of bigot zeal madly to overturn ;
And, if the desolating hand of war
Spare them, they shall continue to bestow,

Upon the thronged abodes of busy men
(Depraved, and ever prone to fill their minds Exclusively with transitory things)
An air and mien of dignified pursuit;
Of sweet civility on rustic wilds.
The poet, fostering for his native land
Such hope, entreats that servants may abound
Of those pure altars worthy ; ministers
Detach'd from pleasure, to the love of gain
Superior, insusceptible of pride,
And by ambition's longings undisturb'd ;
Men whose delight is where their duty leads
Or fixes them, whose least distinguish'd day
Shines with some portion of that heavenly lustre
Which makes the Sabbath lovely in the sight
Of blessed angels pitying human cares.
And, as on earth it is the doom of truth
To be perpetually attack'd by foes
Open or covert, be that priesthood still,
For her defence, replenish'd with a band
Of strenuous champions, in scholastic arts
Thoroughly disciplined ; nor (if in course
Of the revolving world's disturbance
Cause should recur, which righteous Heaven avert !
To meet such a trial) from their spiritual sires
Degenerate ; who, constrain'd to wield the sword
Of disputation, shrunk not, though assail'd
With hostile din, and combating in sight ;
Of angry umpires, partial and unjust ;
And did, thereafter, bathe their hands in fire,
So to declare the conscience satisfied :
Nor for their bodies would accept release ;
But, blessing God and praising Him, bequeath'd
With their last breath, from out the smouldering flame
The faith which they by diligence had earn'd,
And through illuminating grace received,
For their dear countrymen, and all mankind.

O high example, constancy divine !

Even such a man (inheriting the zeal
And from the sanctity of elder times
Not deviating,—a priest, the like of whom,
If multiplied, and in their stations set,
Would o'er the bosom of a joyful land
Spread true religion and her genuine fruits)
Before me stood that day ; on holy ground
Fraught with the relics of mortality,
Exalting tender themes, by just degrees
To lofty raised ; and to the highest last ;
The head and mighty paramount of truths ;
Immortal life in never-fading worlds,
For mortal creatures, conquer'd and secured.

That basis laid, those principles of faith
Announced, as a preparatory act
Of reverence to the spirit of the place,
The Pastor cast his eyes upon the ground ;
Not, as before, like one oppress'd with awe,
But with a mild and social cheerfulness ;
Then to the Solitary turn'd and spake :—

“ At morn or eve, in your retired domain,
Perchance you not unfrequently have mark'd
A visitor, intent upon the task
Of prying, low and high, for herbs and flowers ;
Too delicate employ, as would appear,
For one who, though of drooping mien, had yet
From nature's kindliness, received a frame
Robust as ever rural labour bred.”

The Solitary answer'd :—“ Such a form
Full well I recollect. We often cross'd
Each other's path ; but, as th' intruder seem'd
Fondly to prize the silence which he kept,

And I as willingly did cherish mine,
We met, and pass'd like shadows. I have heard,
From my good host, that he was crazed in brain
By unrequited love, and scaled the rocks,
Dived into caves, and pierced the matted woods,
In hope to find some virtuous herb of power
To cure his malady !”

The Vicar smiled :

“ Alas ! before to-morrow’s sun goes down,
His habitation will be here : for him
That open grave is destined.”

“ Died he then,
Of pain and grief ?” the Solitary asked.
“ Believe it not — oh, never can that be !”

“ He loved,” the Vicar answer’d, “ deeply loved,
Loved fondly, truly, fervently ; and pined
When he had told his loved, and sued in vain :
Rejected, yea, repell’d ; and, if with scorn
Upon the haughty maiden’s brow, ’tis but
A high-prized plume which female beauty wears.
That he could brook, and glory in ; but when
The tidings came that she whom he had woo’d
Was wedded to another, and his heart
Was forced to rend away its only hope ;
Then, Pity could have scarcely found on earth
An object worthier of regard than he,
In the transition of that bitter hour.
Lost was she — lost ; nor could the sufferer say
That in the act of preference he had been
Unjustly dealt with ; but the maid was gone !
She whose dear name with unregarded sighs
He long had bless’d, whose image was preserved —
Shrined in his breast with fond idolatry,
Had vanish’d from his prospects and desires ;
Not by translation to the heavenly choir
Who have put off their mortal spoils — ah no !

She lives another's wishes to complete, —
' Joy be their lot, and happiness, he cried, —
' His lot and hers, as misery is mine !'

"Such was that strong concussion ; but the man,
Who trembled, trunk and limbs, like some huge oak
By a fierce tempest shaken, soon resumed
The steadfast quiet natural to a mind
Of composition gentle and sedate,
And, in its movements, circumspect and slow.
Of rustic parents bred, he had been train'd
(So prompted their aspiring wish) to skill
In numbers, and the sedentary art
Of penmanship, — with pride profess'd, and taught
By his endeavours in the mountain dales.
Now, those sad tidings weighing on his heart,
To books, and papers, and the studious desk,
He stoutly re-address'd himself — resolved
To quell his pain, and enter on the path
Of old pursuits with keener appetite
And closer industry. Of what ensued
Within his soul no outward sign appear'd,
Till a betraying sickliness was seen
To tinge his cheek ; and through his frame it crept
With slow mutation unconcealable ;
Such universal change as autumn makes
In the fair body of a leafy grove
Discolour'd, then divested. 'Tis affirmed
By poets skill'd in Natures secret ways
That Love would not submit to be controll'd
By mastery : and the good man lack'd not friends
Who strove t'instil this truth into his mind,
A mind in all heart-mysteries unversed.
' Go to the hills' said one, ' remit a while
This baneful diligence : at early morn
Court the fresh air, explore the heaths and woods ;
And, leaving it to others to foretell,

By calculations sage, the ebb and flow
Of tides, and when the moon will be eclipsed,
Do you, for your own benefit, construct
A calendar of flow'rs, pluck'd as they blow
Where health abides, and cheerfulness and peace.
Th' attempt was made ' 'tis needless to report
How hopelessly ; but innocence is strong,
And an entire simplicity of mind
A thing most sacred in the eye of Heaven,
That opens for such sufferers, relief
Within their souls, a fount of grace divine :
And doth commend their weakness and disease
To Nature's care, assisted in her office
By all the elements that round her wait
To generate, to preserve, and to restore ;
And by her beautiful array of forms
Shedding sweet influence from above, or pure
Delight exhaling from the ground they tread."

" Impute it not t' impatience, if," exclaim'd
The wanderer, " I infer that he was heal'd
By perseverance in the course prescribed."

" You do not err : the powers, which had been lost
By slow degrees, were gradually regain'd ;
The fluttering nerves composed ; the beating heart
In rest establish'd ; and the jarring thoughts
To harmony restored. But yon dark mould
Will cover him ; in height of strength — to earth
Hastily smitten by a fever's force ;
Yet not with stroke so sudden as refused
Time to look back with tenderness on her
Whom he had loved in passion, and to send
Some farewell words ; and with those words, a prayer
That, from his dying hand, she would accept
Of his possessions, that which most he prized,

A book, upon the surface of whose leaves*
Some chosen plants, disposed with nicest care,
In undecaying beauty were preserved.
Mute register, to him, of time and place,
And various fluctuations in the breast ;
To her, a monument of faithful love
Conquer'd, and in tranquillity retain'd.

“ Close to his destined habitation, lies
One whose endeavours did at length achieve
A victory less worthy of regard,
Though marvellous in its kind. A place exists
High in these mountains, that allured a band
Of keen adventurers to unite their pains,
In search of treasure there by nature formed,
And there conceal'd: but they who tried were foil'd,
And all desisted, all, save him alone ;
Who, taking counsel of his own clear thoughts,
And trusting only to his own weak hands,
Urged unremittingly the stubborn work,
Unseconded, uncountenanced ; then, as time
Pass'd on, while still his lonely efforts found
No recompence, derided ; and at length,
By many pitied, as insane of mind ;
By others dreaded as the luckless thrall
Of subterranean spirits, feeding hope
By various mockery of sight and sound ;
Hope after hope, encouraged and destroy'd.

* A kindred passage occurs in “Keble's Christian Year,” where, in allusion to the Church Service, and especially the Order of Prayers to be used at Sea, and their kindly influence in trouble and heaviness, he thus writes : —

“ Far, far away, the homesick seaman's hoard,
Thy fragrant tokens live,
Like flower-leaves in a precious volume stored
To solace and relieve
Some heart too weary of the restless world.”

But when the lord of seasons had matured
The fruits of earth through space of twice ten years,
The mountain's entrails offered to the view
Of the old man, and to his trembling grasp,
His bright, his long-deferr'd, his dear reward.
Not with more transport did Columbus greet
A world, his rich discovery ! But our swain,
A very hero till his point was gain'd,
Proved all unable to support the weight
Of prosperous fortune. On the fields he look'd
With an unsettled liberty of thought,
Of schemes and wishes ; in the daylight walk'd
Giddy and restless ; ever and anon
Quaff'd in his gratitude immoderate cups ;
And truly might be said to die of joy ! *
He vanish'd ; but conspicuous to this day
The path remains that link'd his cottage-door
To the mine's mouth ; a long and slanting track,
Upon the rugged mountain's stony side
Worn by his daily visits to and from
The darksome centre of a constant hope.
This vestige, neither force of beating rain,
Nor the vicissitudes of frost and thaw,
Shall cause to fade, till ages pass away ;
And it is named, in memory of the event,
The ' Path of Perseverance.' "

“ Thou, from whom

* This incident of the miner pursuing his solitary labour for twenty years is true to the letter. He lived in Patterdale. In reviewing his story, the Poet remarks “one cannot but regret that such perseverance was not sustained by a worthier object.” It is singular that the strength of mind which so long supported him through his unrequited toil, should fail him when crowned with success. Numerous instances are recorded where a sudden influx of wealth has been the cause of derangement, and the unexpected shock of good fortune has been known even to produce idiotcy, but in these cases there had been little or no previous effort to obtain the prize.”

Man has his strength," exclaim'd the wanderer, "oh!
Do thou direct it! To the virtuous grant
The penetrative eye which can perceive
In this blind world the guiding vein of hope,
That, like this labourer, such may dig their way,
'Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified;'
Grant to the wise his firmness of resolve!"

"That prayer were not superfluous," said the Priest,
"Amid the noblest relics, proudest dust,
That Westminster, for Britain's glory, holds
Within the bosom of her awful pile,
Ambitiously collected. Yet the sigh,
Which wafts that prayer to Heaven, is due to all,
Wherever laid, who living fell below
There virtue's humbler mark; a sigh of pain
If to the opposite extreme they sank.
How would you pity her who yonder rests;
Aim, farther off; the pair, who here are laid;
But, above all, that mixture of earth's mould
Whom sight of this green hillock to my mind
Recalls! He lived not till his locks were nipp'd
By seasonable frost of age; nor died
Before his temples, prematurely forced
To mix the manly brown with silver gray,
Give obvious instance of the sad effect
Produced, when thoughtless folly hath usurp'd
The natural crown which sage experience wears.
Gay, volatile, ingenious, quick to learn,
And prompt to exhibit all that he possess'd
Or could perform; a zealous actor, hired
Into the troop of mirth, a soldier — sworn
Into the lists of giddy enterprise —
Such was he; yet, as within his frame
Two several souls alternately had lodged,
Two sets of manners could the youth put on;
And, fraught with antics as the Indian bird

That writhes and chatters in her wiry cage,
Was graceful, when it pleased him, smooth and still
As the mute swan that floats adown the stream,
Or, on the waters of the unruffled lake,
Anchors her placid beauty. Not a leaf,
That flutters on the bough, more light than he ;
And not a flower, that droops in the green shade,
More winningly reserved ! If ye inquire
How such consummate elegance was bred
Amid these wilds ; a composition framed
Of qualities so adverse — to diffuse,
Where'er he moved, diversified delight ;
A simple answer may suffice, even this, —
'Twas Nature's will ; who sometimes undertakes,
For the reproof of human vanity,
Art to outstrip in her peculiar walk.
Hence, for this favourite — lavishly endow'd
With personal gifts, and bright instinctive wit,
While both, embellishing each other, stood
Yet farther recommended by the charm
Of fine demeanour, and by dance and song,
And skill in letters, every fancy shaped
Fair expectations ; nor, when to the world's Capacious field went forth the adventurer, there
Were he and his attainments overlooked,
Or scantily rewarded ; but all hopes,
Cherish'd for him, he suffer'd to depart,
Like blighted buds ; or clouds that mimic'd land
Before the sailor's eye ; or diamond drops
That sparkling deck'd the morning grass ; or aught
That was attractive — and hath ceased to be !
Yet when the prodigal return'd the rites
Of joyful greeting were on him bestow'd,
Who by humiliation undeterr'd,
Sought for his weariness a place of rest
Within his father's gates. Whence came he ? — clothed
In tatter'd garb, from hovels, where abides

Necessity, the stationary host
Of vagrant poverty ; from rifted barns,
Where no one dwells but the wide-staring owl
And the owl's prey ; none permanently house,
But many harbour ; from these haunts, to which
He had descended from the proud saloon,
He came, the ghost of beauty and of health,
The wreck of gaiety ! But soon revived
In strength, in power refitted, he renew'd
His suit to fortune ; and she smiled again
Upon a fickle ingrate. Thrice he rose,
Thrice sank as willingly. For he, whose nerves
Were used to thrill with pleasure, while his voice
Softly accompanied the tuneful harp,
By the nice finger of fair ladies touch'd,
In glittering halls, was able to derive
Not less enjoyment from an abject choice.
Who happier for the moment ? Who more blithe
Than this fallen spirit ? in whose dreary holds
His talents lending to exalt the freaks
Of merry-making beggars, — now, provoked
To laughter multiplied in louder peals
By his malicious wit ; then, all chain'd
With mute astonishment, themselves to see
In their own arts outdone, their fame eclipsed,
As by the very presence of the fiend
Who dictates and inspires illusive feats,
For knavish purposes ! The city, too,
(With shame I speak it,) to her guilty bowers
Allured him, sunk so low in self-respect
As there to linger, there to eat his bread,
Hired minstrel of voluptuous blandishment ;
Charming the air with skill of hand or voice,
Listen who would, be wrought upon who might,
Sincerely wretched hearts, or falsely gay.
Truths I record to many known, for such
The not unfrequent tenor of his boast,

In ears that relish'd the report ; but all
Was from his parents happily conceal'd ;
Who saw enough for blame and pitying love.
They also were permitted to receive
His last, repentant breath ; and closed his eyes,
No more to open on that irksome world
Where he had long existed in the state
Of a young fowl beneath a mother hatch'd,
Though from another sprung of different kind,
Where he had lived, and could not cease to live,
Distracted in propensity ; content
With neither element of good or ill,
And yet in both rejoicing ; man unblest ;
Of contradictions infinite the slave,
Till his deliverance, when mercy made him
One with himself, and one with those who sleep."

"'Tis strange," observed the Solitary ; "strange
It seems, and scarcely less than pitiful,
That in a land where charity provides
For all who can no longer feed themselves,
A man like this should choose to bring his shame
To the parental door ; and with his sighs
Infect the air which he had freely breathed
In happy infancy. He could not pine,
Whene'er rejected, howsoe'er forlorn,
Through lack of converse ; no, he must have found
Abundant exercise for thought and speech
In his dividual being, self-review'd,
Self-catechised, self-punish'd. Some there are
Who, drawing nearer their final home, and much
And daily longing that the same were reach'd,
Would rather shun than seek the fellowship
Of kindred mould. Such haply here are laid."

"Yes," said the Priest, "The genius of our hills —
Who seems, by these stupendous barriers cast

Round his domain, desirous not alone
To keep his own, but also to exclude
All other progeny — doth sometimes lure,
Even by this studied depth of privacy,
The unhappy alien hoping to obtain
Concealment, or seduced by wish to find,
In place from outward molestation free,
Helps to eternal ease. Of many such
Could I discourse ; but as their stay was brief,
So their departure only left behind
Fancies and loose conjectures. Other trace
Survives, for worthy mention, of a pair
Who, from the pressure of their several fates,
Meeting as strangers, in a petty town,
Whose blue roofs ornament a distant reach
Of this far-winding vale, remain'd as friends
True to their choice ; and gave their bones in trust
To this loved cemetery, here to lodge,
With unescutcheon'd privacy interr'd
Far from the family vault. A chieftain, one
By right of birth ; within whose spotless breast
The fire of ancient Caledonia burn'd ;
He, with the foremost whose impatience hail'd
The Stuart, landing to resume, by force
Of arms, the crown which bigotry had lost,
Aroused his clan ; and, fighting at their head,
With his brave sword endeavour'd to prevent Culloden's fatal overthrow. Escaped
From that disastrous rout, to foreign shores
He fled ; and when the lenient hand of time
Those troubles had appeased, he sought and gain'd,
For his obscured condition, an obscure
Retreat within this nook of English ground.

“ The other, born in Britain's southern tract,
Had fix'd his milder loyalty, and placed
His gentler sentiments of love and hate

There, where they placed them who in conscience prized
The new succession, as a line of kings
Whose oath had virtue to protect the land
Against the dire assaults of Papacy
And arbitrary rule. But launch thy bark
On the distemper'd flood of public life,
And cause for most rare triumph will be thine,
If, spite of keenest eye and steadiest hand,
The stream, that bears thee forward, prove not, soon
Or late, a perilous master. He, who oft,
Under the battlements and stately trees
That round his mansion cast a sober gloom,
Had moralised on this, and other truths
Of kindred import, pleased and satisfied,
Was forced to vent his wisdom with a sigh
Heaved from the heart in fortune's bitterness.
When he had crush'd a plentiful estate
By ruinous contest, to obtain a seat
In Britain's senate. Fruitless was th' attempt;
And while the uproar of that desperate strife
Continued yet to vibrate on his ear,
The vanquish'd Whig, beneath a borrow'd name (For the mere sound and echo of his own *

* The reference here is to two individuals who were by stress of fortune driven to take refuge in the obscure town of Hawkshead, near Esthwaite Water. Their stories were narrated to Wordsworth by the old dame with whom he lodged when a schoolboy and afterwards, for nearly ten years in all. The elder, a Jacobite, was of a high Scottish family, — the Drumonds. The Hanoverian Whig was Sir George Vandeput, a descendant of some Dutch follower of King William. His zeal was such, that in support of his party he ruined himself in a contest for the representation of Westminster, and retired to this secluded spot, for the sake of that obscurity which it no longer retains since it has become the fashion to visit the lakes. So much out of the way was this region considered about eighty or ninety years ago, that persons who had fled from justice were known to resort to it and even to make fresh forays from the place of their concealment. Particular mention is made of two brothers named

Haunted him with sensations of disgust
Which he was glad to lose,) slunk from the world
To the deep shade of these untravell'd wilds ;
In which the Scottish laird had long possess'd
An undisturb'd abode. Here, then, they met,
Two doughty champions ; flaming Jacobite
And sullen Hanoverian ! You might think
That losses and vexations less severe
Than those which had severally sustain'd, they Would have inclined each to abate his zeal
For his ungrateful cause ; no, — I have heard
My reverend father tell that, 'mid the calm
Of that small town encountering thus, they fill'd,
Daily, its bowling-green with harmless strife ;
Plagued with uncharitable thoughts the church,
And vex'd the market-place. But in the breasts
Of these opponents gradually was wrought,
With little change of general sentiment,
Such change towards each other, that their days
By choice were spent in constant fellowship ;
And if, at times, they fretted with the yoke,
Those very bickerings made them love it more.

“A favourite boundary to their lengthen'd walks
This churchyard was. And whether they had come
Treading their path in sympathy, and link'd
In social converse, or by some short space
Discreetly parted to preserve the peace,
One spirit seldom fail'd to extend its sway
Over both minds, when they a while had mark'd

Weston, who took up their abode at Old Brathay. They were highwaymen, and lived there for a considerable time undiscovered, though they often disappeared as if on some mysterious errand. Their horses were of a choice breed, and they were observed to be curious in their saddles, housings, and accoutrements, which they purchased at Kendal. It is currently reported that, in the end, they were both taken and hanged.

The visible quiet of this holy ground,
And breathed its soothing air — the spirit of hope
And saintly magnanimity — that, spurning
The field of selfish difference and dispute,
And every care which transitory things,
Earth, and the kingdoms of the earth create,
Doth, by a rapture of forgetfulness,
Preclude forgiveness, from the praise debarr'd
Which else the Christian virtue might have claim'd.
There live who yet remember here to have seen
Their courtly figures, seated on the stump
Of an old yew, their favourite resting-place.
But, as the remnant of the long-lived tree
Was disappearing by a swift decay,
They, with joint care, determined to erect,
Upon its site, a dial, which should stand
For public use ; and also might survive
As their own private monument : for this
Was the particular spot in which they wish'd
(And Heaven was pleased to accomplish the desire)
That, undivided, their remains should lie.
So, where the moulder'd tree had stood, was raised
Yon structure, framing, with the ascent of steps
That to the decorated pillar lead,
A work of art, more sumptuous, as might seem
Than suits this place ; yet built in no proud scorn
Of rustic homeliness ; they only aim'd
To insure for it respectful guardianship,
Around the margin of the plate, whereon
The shadow falls, to note the stealthy hours,
Winds an inscriptive legend." At these words
Thither we turned ; and gather'd as we read,
The appropriate sense, in Latin numbers couch'd : —
" Time flies ; it is his melancholy task
To bring, and bear away, delusive hopes,
And reproduce the troubles he destroys.
But, while his blindness thus is occupied,

Discerning mortal, do thou serve the will
Of time's eternal Master, and that peace,
Which the world wants, shall be for thee confirm'd !”

“Smooth verse, inspir'd by no unletter'd muse,” Exclaim'd the sceptic, “and the strain of thought
Accords with Nature's language ; the soft voice
Of yon white torrent falling down the rocks
Speaks, less distinctly, to the same effect.
If, then, their blended influence be not lost
Upon our hearts — not wholly lost, I grant,
Even upon mine — the more are we required
To feel for those among our fellow-men,
Who, offering no obeisance to the world,
Are yet made desperate by ‘too quick a sense
Of constant infelicity’ — cut off
From peace, like exiles on some barren rock,
Their life's appointed prison ; not more free
Than sentinels, between two armies set.
With nothing better, in the chill night air,
Than their own thoughts to comfort them. Say why
That ancient story of Prometheus chain'd ?
The vulture — th' inexhaustible repast
Drawn from his vitals. Say what meant the woes
By Tantalus entail'd upon his race,
And the dark sorrows of the line of Thebes.
Fictions in form, but in their substance truths —
Tremendous truths ! familiar to the men
Of long-past times ; not obsolete in ours.
Exchange the shepherd's frock of native gray
For robes with regal tinged ! convert
The crook into a sceptre ; give the pomp
Of circumstance, and here the tragic muse
Shall find apt subjects for her highest art,
Amid the groves, beneath the shadowy hills,
The generations are prepared ; the pangs,
The internal pangs are ready ; the dread strife

Of poor humanity's afflicted will Struggling in vain with ruthless destiny."

"Though," said the Priest, "in answer, "these be terms
Which a divine philosophy rejects,
We, whose establish'd and unfailing trust
Is in controlling Providence, admit
That through all stations human life abounds
With mysteries; for if Faith were left untried,
How could the might that lurks within her then
Be shewn? her glorious excellence — that ranks
Among the first of powers and virtues — proved?
Our system is not fashion'd to preclude
That sympathy which you for others ask;
And I could tell, not travelling for my theme
Beyond the limits of these humble graves,
Of strange disasters; but I pass them by,
Loath to disturb what Heaven hath hush'd in peace.
Still less, far less, am I inclined to treat
Of man degraded in his Maker's sight
By the deformities of brutish vice:
For, though from these materials might be framed
Harsh portraiture, in which a vulgar face
And a coarse outside of repulsive life
And unaffected manners may at once
Be recognized by all" — "Ah! do not think,"
The Wanderer somewhat eagerly exclaim'd,
"Wish could be ours that you, for such poor gain (Gain shall I call it? — gain of what? — for whom?)
Should breathe a word tending to violate
Your own pure spirit. Not a step we look for
In slight of that forbearance and reserve
Which common human-heartedness inspires,
And mortal ignorance and frailty claim,
Upon this sacred ground, if nowhere else."

"True," said the Solitary; "be it far

From us to infringe the laws of charity.
Let judgment here in mercy be pronounced ;
This, self-respecting Nature prompts, and this Wisdom enjoins ; but if the thing we seek
Be genuine knowledge, bear we then in mind
How, from his lofty throne, the sun can fling
Colours as bright on exhalations bred
By weedy pool or pestilential swamp,
As by the rivulet, sparkling where it runs,
Or the pellucid lake."

" Small risk," said I,
" Of such illusion do we here incur ;
Temptation here is none to exceed the truth !
No evidence appears that they who rest
Within this ground, were covetous of praise,
Or of remembrance e'en, deserved or not.
Green is the churchyard, beautiful and green,
Ridge rising gently by the side of ridge ;
A heaving surface, almost wholly free
From interruption of sepulchral stones,
And mantled o'er with aboriginal turf
And everlasting flowers. These dalesmen trust
The lingering gleam of their departed lives
To oral records and the silent heart :
Depository faithful and more kind
Than fondest epitaphs : for, if it fail,
What boots the sculptur'd tomb ! And who can blame,
Who rather would not envy, men that feel
This mutual confidence ; if from such a source
The practice flow, — if thence, or from a deep
And general humility in death ?
Nor should I much condemn it, if it spring
From disregard of time's destructive power,
As only capable to prey on things
Of earth, and human nature's mortal part.

" Yet, in less simple districts, where we see

Stone lift its forehead emulous of stone
In courting notice, and the ground all paved
With commendations of departed worth,
Reading, where'er we turn, of innocent lives,
Of each domestic charity fulfill'd,
And sufferings meekly borne — I, for my part,
Though with the silence pleased which here prevails,
Among those fair recitals also range,
Soothed by the natural spirit which they breathe.
And, in the centre of a world whose soil
Is rank with all unkindness, compass'd round
With such memorials, I have sometimes felt
That 'twas no momentary happiness
To have one enclosure where the voice that speaks
In envy or detraction is not heard ;
Which malice may not enter ; where the trace
Of evil inclinations is unknown ;
Where love and piety tenderly unite
With resignation ; and no jarring tone
Intrudes, the peaceful concert to disturb
Of amity and gratitude."

"Thus sanction'd,
The Pastor said, "I willingly confine
My narrative to subjects that excite
Feelings with these accordant ; love, esteem,
And admiration ; lifting up a veil,
A sunbeam introducing among hearts
Retired and covert ; so that ye shall have Clear images before your gladden'd eyes
Of nature's unambitious underwood,
And flowers that prosper in the shade. And when I speak of such among my flock as swerved
Or fell, those only will I single out
Upon whose lapse, or error, something more
Than brotherly forgiveness may attend ;
To such will we restrict our notice, else
Better my tongue were mute. And yet there are,

I feel, good reasons why we should not leave
Wholly untraced a more forbidding way.
For strength to persevere and to support,
And energy to conquer and repel,
These elements of virtue, that declare
The native grandeur of the human soul,
Are oftentimes not unprofitably shewn
In the perverseness of a selfish course :
Truth every day exemplified, no less
In the gray cottage by the murmuring stream
Than the fantastic conqueror's roving camp,
Or in the factious senate, uappall'd,
While merciless proscription ebbs and flows.
There," said the Vicar, pointing as he spake,
" A woman rests in peace ; surpass'd by few
In power of mind and eloquent discourse.
Tall was her stature, her complexion dark
And saturnine ; her port erect, her head
Not absolutely raised, as if to hold
Converse with heaven, nor yet depress'd tow'rds earth,
But in projection carried, as she walk'd
For ever musing. Sunken were her eyes :
Wrinkled and furrow'd with habitual thought
Was her broad forehead ; like the brow of one
Whose visual nerve shrinks from a painful glare
Of overpowering light.—While yet a child,
She, 'mid the humble flow'rets of the vale,
Tower'd like the imperial thistle, not unfurnish'd
With its appropriate grace, yet rather framed
To be admired, than coveted and loved.
Even at that age she ruled as sovereign queen
Among her playmates ; else their simple sports
Had wanted power to occupy a mind
Held in subjection by a strong control
Of studious application, self-imposed.
Books were her creditors ; to them she paid,
With eager anxious eagerness, the hours

Which they exacted ; were it time allow'd,
Or seized upon by stealth, or fairly won,
By stretch of industry from other tasks.
Oh ! pang of sorrowful regret for them
Whom, in their youth, sweet study has enthrall'd,
That they have lived for harsher servitude,
Whether in soul, in body, or estate !
Such doom was hers ; yet nothing could subdue
Her keen desire for knowledge, or efface
Those brighter images, by books impress'd
Upon her memory ; faithfully as stars
That occupy their places, — and, though oft
Hidden by clouds, and oft bedimm'd by haze,
Are not to be extinguish'd or impair'd.

“ Two passions, both degenerate, for they both
Began in honour, gradually obtain'd
Rule over her, and vex'd her daily life ;
An unrelenting, avaricious thrift,
And a strange thralldom of maternal love,
And held her spirit in its own despise,
Bound by vexation, and regret, and scorn,
Constrain'd forgiveness, and relenting vows,
And tears, in pride suppress'd, in shame conceal'd,
To a poor dissolute son, her only child.
Her wedded days had open'd with mishap,
Whence dire dependence. What could she perform
To shake the burden off ? Ah ! there she felt
Indignantly the weakness of her sex,
Th' injustice of her low estate. She mused ;
Resolved ; adhered to her resolve ; her heart
Closed by degrees to charity ; and, thence Expecting not Heaven's blessing, placed her trust
In ceaseless pains and parsimonious care,
Which got and sternly hoarded each day's gain.

“ Thus all was re-established, and a pile

Constructed that sufficed for every end,
Save the content of the builder's mind ; / content
A mind by nature indisposed to aught
So placid, so inactive, as content ;
A mind intolerant of lasting peace,
And cherishing the pang which it deplored.
Dread life of conflict ! which I oft compared
To the agitation of a brook that runs
Down rocky mountains — buried now and lost
In silent pools, unfathomably deep ; —
Now, in a moment, starting forth again
With violence, and proud of its escape ;
Until it sink once more, by slow degrees,
Or instantly, into as dark repose.

“ A sudden illness seized her in the strength
Of life's autumnal season. Shall I tell
How on her bed of death the matron lay,
To Providence submissive, so she thought ;
But fretted, vex'd, and wrought upon — almost
To anger, by the malady that griped
Her prostrate frame with unrelaxing power,
As the fierce eagle fastens on the lamb.
She pray'd, she moan'd — her husband's sister watch'd
Her dreary pillow, waited on her needs ;
And yet the very sound of that kind foot
Was anguish to her ears ! ‘ And must she rule,’
Thus was the dying woman heard to say
In bitterness, ‘ and must she rule and reign,
Sole mistress of this house, when I am gone ?
Sit by my fire — possess what I possess'd —
Tend what I tended, calling it her own !’
Enough — I fear, too much. Of nobler feeling
Take this example. One autumnal eve,
While she was yet in prime of health and strength,
I well remember, while I pass'd her door,
Musing with loitering step, and upward eye

Turn'd tow'ards the planet Jupiter, that hung
Above the centre of the vale, a voice
Roused me — her voice ; it said, ' That glorious star
In its untroubled element, will shine
As now it shines, when we are laid in earth
And safe from all our sorrows.' She is safe,
And her uncharitable acts, I trust,
And harsh unkindnesses, are all forgiven,
Though in this vale remember'd with deep awe ! ”

The vicar paused ; and tow'ards a seat advanced,
A long stone seat, framed in the churchyard wall ;
Part under shady sycamore, and part
Offering a place of rest, in pleasant sunshine
Even as many suit the comers, old or young,
Who seek the house of worship, where the bells
Yet ring with all their voices, or before
The last hath ceased its solitary knell.
To this commodious resting-place he led ;
Where, by his side, we all sate down ; and there
His office, uninvited, he resumed : —

“ As, on a sunny bank, a tender lamb
Lurks in safe shelter from the winds of March,
Screen'd by its parent, so that little mound
Lies guarded by its neighbour ; the small heap
Speaks for itself ; an infant there doth rest,
The sheltering hillock is the mother's grave.
If mild discourse, and manners that conferr'd
A natural dignity on humblest rank ;
If gladsome spirits, and benignant looks,
That for a face not beautiful did more
Than beauty for the fairest face can do ;
And if religious tenderness of heart,
Grieving for sin, and penitential tears
Shed when the clouds had gather'd and disstain'd
The spotless ether of a maiden life ;

If these may make a hallow'd spot of earth
More holy in the sight of God or man ;
Then, on that mould, a sanctity shall brood
Till the stars sicken at the day of doom.

“ Ah ! what a warning for a thoughtless man,
Could field or grove, or any spot of earth,
Shew to his eye an image of the pangs
Which it hath witness'd — render back an echo
Of the sad steps by which it hath been trod ! *
There, by her innocent baby's precious grave,
Yea, doubtless on the turf that roofs her own,
The mother oft was seen to stand, or kneel
In the broad day, a weeping Magdalene.
Now she is not ; the swelling turf reports
Of the fresh flower, but of poor Ellen's tears

* In the autumn of 1836, the amiable and excellent Justice Coleridge and his family enjoyed a visit of six weeks at Foxhow, the residence of Dr. Arnold. His memoranda at that time are communicated in the ‘Memoirs’ to which we are indebted for so many interesting details. Under date of October 14, after describing the preparations for an excursion to Easedale, he writes of Wordsworth, who accompanied them : “—— he trudging before, with his green gauze shade over his eyes, and in his plaid jacket and waistcoat. First he turned aside at a little farmhouse, and took us into a field, to look down on the tumbling stream which bounded it, and which we saw precipitated at a distance, in a broad white sheet, from the mountain. A beautiful water-break of the same stream was before us at our feet, and he noticed the connection which it formed in the landscape with the distant waterfall. Then as he mused for an instant, he said, ‘I have often thought what a solemn thing it would be, if we could have brought to our mind at once, all the scenes of distress and misery which any spot however calm and beautiful before us, has been witness to since the beginning.’ That water-break, with the glassy, quiet pool beneath it, that looks so lovely, and presents no image to the mind but of peace, — there I remember, the only son of his father, a poor man who lived yonder, was drowned. He missed him, came to search and saw his body dead in the pool.’”

Is silent ; nor is any vestige left
Upon the path, of her mournful tread ;
Nor of that peace with which she once had moved
In virgin fearlessness, a step that seem'd
Caught from the pressure of elastic turf
Upon the mountains wet with morning dew,
In the prime hour of sweetest scents and airs.
Serious and thoughtful was her mind ; and yet,
By reconcilment exquisite and rare,
The form, port, motions of this cottage girl,
Were such as might have quicken'd and inspired
A Titian's hand, address'd to picture forth
Oread or Dryad glancing through the shade
When first the hunter's startling horn is heard
Upon the golden hills. A spreading elm
Stands in our valley, called 'the Joyful Tree ;'
An elm distinguish'd by that festive name,
From dateless usage which our peasants hold
Of giving welcome to the first of May
By dances round its trunk. And if the sky
Permit, like honours, dance and song, are paid
To the Twelfth Night, beneath the frosty stars
Or the clear moon. The queen of these gay sports,
If not in beauty, yet in sprightly air,
Was hapless Ellen. Not one touch'd the ground
So deftly, and the nicest maiden's locks
Less gracefully were braided ; but this praise,
Methinks, would better suit another place.

"She loved, and fondly deem'd herself beloved.
The road is dim, the current unperceived,
The weakness painful and most pitiful,
By which a virtuous woman, in pure youth,
May be delivered to distress and shame.
Such fate was hers. The last time Ellen danced
Among her equals round 'the Joyful Tree,'
She bore a secret burthen ; and full soon

Was left to tremble for a breaking vow, —
Then, to bewail a sternly-broken vow,
Alone, within her widow'd mother's house.
It was the season sweet of budding leaves,
Of days advancing tow'rds their utmost length,
And small birds singing to their happy mates.
Wild is the music of the autumnal wind
Among the faded woods : but these blithe notes
Strike the deserted to the heart : I speak
Of what I know, and what we feel within.
Beside the cottage in which Ellen dwelt
Stands a tall ash-tree ; to whose topmost twig
A thrush resorts, and annually chants,
At morn and evening, from that naked perch,
While all the undergrove is thick with leaves,
A time-beguiling ditty, for delight
Of his fond partner, silent in the nest.
'Ah ! why,' said Ellen, sighing to herself,
'Why do not words, and kiss, and solemn pledge,
And nature that is kind in woman's breast,
And reason that in man is wise and good,
And fear of Him who is a righteous judge ;
Why do not these prevail for human life,
To keep two hearts together that began
Their spring-time with one love, and that have need
Of mutual pity and forgiveness, sweet
To grant, or be received, while that poor bird
Oh, come and hear him ! Thou who hast to me
Been faithless, hear him, though a lonely creature,
One of God's simple children that ye/ know not yet
The universal Parent, how he sings
As if he wish'd the firmament of heaven
Should listen, and give back to him the voice
Of his triumphant constancy and love ;
The proclamation that he makes, how far
His darkness doth transcend our fickle light !'

“Such was the tender passage, not by me
Repeated without loss of simple phrase,
Which I perused, even as the words had been Committed by forsaken Ellen’s hand
To the blank margin of a valentine,
Bedropp’d with tears. ’Twill please you to be told
That, studiously withdrawing from the eye
Of all companionship, the sufferer yet
In lonely reading found a meek resource.
How thankful for the warmth of summer days,
And their long twilight!—friendly to that stealth
With which she slipp’d into the cottage barn.
And found a secret oratory there ;
Or, in the garden, pored upon her book
By the last lingering help of open sky,
Till the dark night dismiss’d her to her bed.
Thus did a waking fancy sometimes lose
The unconquerable pang of despised love.

“A kindlier passion open’d on her soul
When that poor child was born. Upon its face
She look’d as on a pure and spotless gift
Of unexpected promise, where a grief
Of dread was all that had been thought of—joy
Far sweeter than bewilder’d traveller feels Upon a perilous waste, where all night long
Through darkness he hath toil’d and fearful storm,
When he beholds the first pale speck serene
Of day-spring in the gloomy east reveal’d,
And greets it with thanksgiving. ‘Till this hour,’
Thus in her mother’s hearing Ellen spake,
‘There was a stony region in my heart ;
But He, at whose command the parched rock
Was smitten, and pour’d forth a quenching stream,
Hath soften’d that obduracy, and made
Unlook’d for gladness in the desert place,
To save the perishing ; and, henceforth, I look

Upon the light with cheerfulness, for thee
 My infant ! and for that good mother dear,
 Who bore me, and hath pray'd for me in vain ;
 Yet not in vain, — it shall not be in vain.'
 She spake, nor was the assurance unfulfill'd,
 And if heart-rending thoughts would oft return,
 They stay'd not long. The blameless infant grew ;
 The child whom Ellen and her mother loved
 They soon were proud of ; tended it and nursed,
 A soothing comforter, although forlorn :
 Like a poor singing-bird from distant lands ;
 Or a choice shrub, which he who passes by
 With vacant mind, not seldom may observe
 Fair flowering in a thinly-peopled house,
 Whose window, somewhat sadly, it adorns.

“ Through four months' space the infant drew its food
 From the maternal breast : then scruples rose ;
 Thoughts, which the rich are free from, came and cross'd
 The sweet affection. She no more could bear
 By her offence to lay a twofold weight
 On a kind parent willing to forget
 Their slender means ; so, to that parent's care
 Trusting her child, she left their common home,
 And with contented spirit undertook
 A foster-mother's office.

“ 'Tis, perchance,
 Unknown to you that in these simple vales
 The natural feeling of equality
 Is by domestic service unimpair'd ;
 Yet, though such service be, with us, removed
 From sense of degradation, not the less
 The ungentle mind can easily find means
 To impose severe restraints and laws unjust :
 Which hapless Ellen now was doom'd to feel.

“ In selfish blindness, for I will not say

In naked and deliberate cruelty,
The pair, whose infant she was bound to nurse,
Forbad her all communion with her own.
They urged that such meeting would disturb
The mother's mind, distract her thoughts, and thus Unfit her for her duty ; in which dread,
Week after week, the mandate was enforced,
So near ! yet not allow'd upon that sight
To fix her eyes — alas ! 'twas hard to bear !
But worse affliction must be borne — far worse !
For 'tis Heaven's will, that, after a disease
Begun and ended within three days' space,
Her child should die ; as Ellen now exclaim'd
Her own, deserted child ! Once, only once,
She saw it in that mortal malady :
And on the burial-day, could scarcely gain
Permission to attend its obsequies.
She reach'd the house — last of the funeral train ;
And some one, as she enter'd, having chanced
To urge unthinkingly their prompt departure,
'Nay,' said she, with commanding look, a spirit
Of anger never seen in her before,
'Nay, ye must wait my time !' and down she sate,
And by the unclosed coffin kept her seat,
Weeping and looking, looking on and weeping
Upon the last sweet slumber of her child,
Until at length her soul was satisfied.

“You see the infant's grave ; and to this spot
The mother, oft as she was sent abroad,
And whatsoe'er the errand, urged her steps ;
Hither she came ; and here she stood, or knelt
In the broad day — a rueful Magdalene !
So call her ; for not only she bewail'd
A mother's loss, but mourn'd in bitterness
Her own transgression ; penitent sincere
As ever raised to Heaven a streaming eye.

At length the parents of the foster-child,
Nothing that in despite of their commands,
She still renew'd, and could not but not renew,
Those visitations, ceased to send her forth ;
Or, to the narrow garden's bounds confined.
I fail'd not to remind them that they err'd ;
For Holy Nature might not thus be cross'd,
Thus wrong'd in woman's breast : in vain I pleaded :
But the green stalk of Ellen's life was snapp'd,
And the flower droop'd ; as every one could see,
It hung its head in mortal languishment.
Aided by this appearance, I at length
Prevail'd ; and, from those bonds released, she went Home to her mother's house. The youth was fled ;
The rash betrayer could not face the shame
Or sorrow which his senseless guilt had caused ;
And little would his presence, or proof given
Of a relenting soul, have now avail'd ;
For, like a shadow, he was pass'd away
From Ellen's thoughts ; had perish'd to her mind
For all concerns of fear, or hope, or love,
Save only those which to their common shame,
And to his moral being, appertain'd.
Hope from that quarter would, I know, have brought
A heavenly comfort : there she recognised
An unrelaxing bond, a mutual need ;
There, and, as seem'd, there only. She had raised,
Her fond maternal heart had built, a nest
In blindness all two near the river's edge ;
That work a summer flood with hasty swell
Had swept away, and now her spirit long'd
For its last flight to heaven's security.
The bodily frame was wasted day by day ;
Meanwhile, relinquishing all other cares,
Her mind she strictly tutor'd to find peace
And pleasure in endurance. Much she thought,
And much she read, and brooded feelingly,

Upon her own unworthiness. To me,
As to a spiritual comforter and friend,
Her heart she open'd, and no pains were spared
To mitigate, as gently as I could,
The sting of self-reproach with healing words.
Meek saint — through patience glorified on earth !
In whom, as by her lonely hearth she sat,
The ghastly face of cold decay put on
A sun-like beauty, and appeared divine !
May I not mention, that, within these walls,
In due observance of her pious wish,
The congregation join'd with me in prayer
For her soul's good ? Nor was that office vain.
Much did she suffer ; but if any friend,
Beholding her condition, at the sight
Gave way to words of pity or complaint,
She still'd them with a prompt reproof, and said :
' He who afflicts me knows what I can bear,
And when I fail, and can endure no more,
Will mercifully take me to himself.'
So, through the cloud of death her spirit pass'd
Into that pure and unknown world of love
Where injury cannot come : and here is laid
The mortal body by her infant's side."

The Vicar ceased, and downcast looks made known
That each had listen'd with his inmost heart.
For me, the emotion scarcely was less strong
Or less benign than that which I had felt
When, seated by my venerable friend,
Beneath those shady elms, from him I heard
The story that retraced the slow decline
Of Margaret sinking on the lonely heath,
With the neglected house in which she dwelt.
I noted that the Solitary's cheek
Confess'd the power of nature. Pleased, though sad,
More pleased than sad, the gray-hair'd Wand'rer sate,

Thanks to his pure imaginative soul,
Capacious and serene : his blameless life,
His knowledge, wisdom, love of truth, and love
Of human kind ! He was it who first broke
The pensive silence, saying, " Blest are they Whose sorrow rather is to suffer wrong
Than to do wrong, although themselves have err'd.
This tale gives proof that Heaven most gently deals
With such in their affliction. Ellen's fate,
Her tender spirit, and her contrite heart,
Call to my mind dark hints which I have heard
Of one who died within this vale, by doom
Heavier, as his offence was heavier far.
Where, sir, I pray you, where are laid the bones
Of Wilfred Armathwaite ? "

The Vicar answer'd : —

" In that green nook, close by the churchyard wall,
Beneath yon hawthorn, planted by myself
In memory and for warning, and in sign
Of sweetness, where dire anguish had been known,
Of reconciliation after deep offence,
There doth he lie. In this, his native vale,
He own'd and till'd a little plot of land ;
Here, with his consort and his children saw,
Days that were seldom cross'd by petty strife,
Years safe from large misfortune ; and maintain'd
That course which minds, of insight not too keen,
Might look on with entire complacency.
Yet, in himself and near him, there were faults
At work to undermine his happy state
By sure, though tardy, progress. Active, prompt,
And lively was his housewife ; in the vale
None more industrious ; but her industry,
Ill-judged, full oft, and specious, tended more
To splendid neatness, to a showy, trim,
And overlabour'd purity of house,

Than to substantial thrift. He, on his part,
Generous and easy-minded, was not free
From carelessness ; and thus, in lapse of time,
These joint infirmities induced decay
Of wordly substance ; and distress of mind,
That to a thoughtful man was hard to shun,
And which he could not cure. A blooming girl
Served in the house, a favourite that had grown
Beneath his eye, encouraged by his care.
Poor now in tranquil pleasure, he gave way
To thoughts of troubled pleasure ; he became A lawless suitor to the maid ; and she Yielded unworthily. Unhappy man !
That which he had been weak enough to do
Was misery in remembrance ; he was stung,
Stung by his inward thoughts, and by the smiles
Of wife and children stung to agony.
Wretched at home, he gain'd no peace abroad ;
Ranged through the mountains, slept upon the earth,
Ask'd comfort of the open air, and found
No quiet in the darkness of the night,
No pleasure in the beauty of the day.
His flock he slighted ; his paternal fields
Became a clog to him, whose spirit wish'd
To fly — but whither ? And this gracious church,
That wears a look so full of peace and hope
And love, benignant mother of the vale,
How fair amid her brood of cottages !
She was to him a sickness and reproach.
Much to the last remain'd unknown ; but this
Is sure, that through remorse and grief he died ;
Though pitied among men, absolved by God,
He could not find forgiveness in himself ;
Nor could endure the weight of his own shame.

“ Here rests a mother. But from her I turn,
And from her grave. Behold — upon that ridge,

Which, stretching boldly from the mountain-side,
Carries into the centre of the vale
Its rocks and woods — the cottage where she dwelt ;
And where yet dwells her faithful partner, left (Full eight years past) the solitary prop
Of many helpless children. I begin
With words which might be prelude to a tale
Of sorrow and dejection ; but I feel
No sadness, when I think of what mine eyes
See daily in that happy family.
Bright garland form they for the pensive brow
Of their undrooping father's widowhood.
Those six fair daughters, budding yet — not one,
Not one of all the band, a full-blown flower.
Depress'd and desolate of soul, as once
That father was, and fill'd with anxious fear,
Now by experience taught, he stands assured,
That God, who takes away, yet takes not half
Of what he seems to take ; or gives it back,
Not to our prayer, but far beyond our prayer ;
He gives it — the boon produce of a soil
Which our endeavours have refused to till,
And hope hath never water'd. The abode
Whose grateful owner can attest these truths,
Even were the object nearer to our sight,
Would seem in no distinction to surpass
The rudest habitations. Ye might think
That it had sprung self-raised from earth, or grown
Out of the living rock, to be adorn'd
By nature only ; but, if thither led,
Ye would discover, then, a studious work
Of many fancies prompting many hands.
Brought from the woods, the honeysuckle twines
Around the porch, and seems, in that trim place
A plant no longer wild ; the cultured rose
There blooms, strong in health, and will be soon
Roof-high ; the wild pink crowns the garden wall,

And with the flowers are intermingled stones
Sparry and bright, the scatterings of the hills.
These ornaments that fade not with the year,
A hardy girl continues to provide ;
Who, mounting fearlessly the rocky heights,
Her father's prompt attendant, does for him
All that a boy could do — but with delight
More keen, and prouder daring ; yet hath she Within the garden, like the rest, a bed
For her own flowers and favourite herbs — a space
By sacred charter holden, for her use.
These, and whatever else the garden bears
Of fruit or flower, permission ask'd or not,
I freely gather ; and my leisure draws
A not unfrequent pastime from the sight
Of the bees murmuring round their shelter'd hives
In that enclosure ! while the mountain rill,
That sparkling thrids the rocks, attunes his voice
To the pure course of human life, which there
Flows on in solitude from year to year.
But at the closing in of night, then most
This dwelling charms me. Cover'd by the gloom,
Then, in my walks, I oftentimes stop short
(Who could refrain ?) and feed by stealth my sight
With prospect of the company within,
Laid open through the blazing window ; — there
I see the eldest daughter at her wheel
Spinning amain, as if to overtake
The never-halting time ; or, in her turn,
Teaching some novice of the sisterhood
The skill in this, or other household work,
Which, from her father's honour'd hand, herself,
While she was yet a little one, had learn'd.
Mild man ! he is not gay, but they are gay,
And the whole house seems fill'd with gaiety.
Thrice happy, then, the mother may be deem'd,
The wife, who rests beneath that turf, from which

I turn'd, that ye in mind might witness where
And how her spirit yet survives on earth?

“The next three ridges — those upon the left —
By close connexion with our present thought,
Tempt me to add, in praise of humble worth,
Their brief and unobtrusive history.
One hillock, ye may note, is small and low,
Sunk almost to a level with the plain
By weight of time ; the others, undepress'd,
Are bold and swelling. There a husband sleeps,
Deposited, in pious confidence
Of glorious resurrection with the just,
Near the loved-partner of his early days ;
And, in the bosom of that family mould,
A second wife is gather'd to his side ;
The approved assistant of an arduous course
From his mid-noon of manhood to old age !
He also of his mate deprived, was left
Alone — 'mid many children ; one a babe
Orphan'd as soon as born. Alas ! 'tis not
In course of nature that a father's wing
Should warm these little ones ; and can he feed ?
That was a thought of agony more keen.
For, hand in hand with death, by strange mishap
And chance encounter on their diverse road,
The ghastlier shape of poverty had enter'd
Into that house, unfear'd and unforeseen.
He had stepp'd forth in time of urgent need,
The generous surety of a friend ; and now
The widow'd father found that all his rights
In his paternal fields were undermined :
Landless he was and penniless. The dews
Of night and morn, that wet the mountain sides,
The bright stars twinkling on their dusky tops,
Were conscious of the pain that drove him forth
From his own door, he knew not when to range —

He knew not where ; distracted was his brain,
His heart was cloven ; and full oft he pray'd,
In blind despair, that God would take them all.
But suddenly, as if in one kind moment
To encourage and remove, a gleam of light
Broke from the very bosom of that cloud
Which darken'd the whole prospect of his days.
For he who now possess'd the joyless right
To force the bondsman from his house and lands,
In pity, and by admiration urged
Of his unmurmuring and considerate mind,
Meekly submissive to the law's decree,
Lighten'd the penalty with liberal hand.
The desolate father raised his head, and look'd
On the wide world in hope. Within these walls,
In course of time was solemnised the vow
Whereby a virtuous woman, of grave years
And of prudential habits, undertook
The sacred office of a wife to him,
Of mother to his helpless family.
Nor did she fail — in nothing did she fail,
Through various exercise of twice ten years,
Save in some partial fondness for that child
Which at the birth she had received, the babe
Whose heart had known no mother but herself.
By mutual efforts, by united hopes,
By daily-growing help of boy and girl,
Train'd early to participate that zeal
Of industry, which runs before the day
And lingers after it ; by strong restraint
Of an economy which did not check
The heart's more generous motions tow'rd's themselves
Or to their neighbours ; and by trust in God,
This pair insensibly subdued the fears
And troubles that beset their life : and thus
Did the good father and his second mate
Redeem at length their plot of smiling fields.

These, at this day, the eldest son retains :
 The younger offspring, through the busy world,
 Have all been scatter'd wide, by various fates ;
 But each departed from the native vale,
 In beauty flourishing, and moral worth !"

Impression of these narratives upon the author's mind — Pastor invited to give account of certain graves that lie apart — Clergyman and his family — Fortunate influence of change of situation — Activity in extreme old age — Another clergyman, a character of resolute virtue — Lamentations over mis-directed applause — Instance of less exalted excellence in a deaf man — Elevated character of a blind man — Reflection upon blindness — Interrupted by a peasant who passes — His animal cheerfulness and careless vivacity — He occasions a digression on the fall of beautiful and interesting trees — A female infant's grave : joy at her birth ; sorrow at her departure — A youthful peasant — His patriotic enthusiasm — Distinguished qualities — And untimely death — Exultation of the Wanderer, as a patriot, in this picture — Solitary, how affected — Monument of a knight — Traditions concerning him — Peroration of the Wanderer on the transitoriness of things and the revolutions of society — Hints at his own past calling — Thanks the Pastor.

WHILE thus from theme to theme the historian pass'd,
 The words he utter'd, and the scene that lay
 Before our eyes, awaken'd in my mind
 Vivid remembrance of those long-past hours,
 When, in the hollow of some shadowy vale,
 (What time the splendour of the setting sun

Lay beautiful on Snowdon's craggy top,
On Cader Idris, or huge Penmanmaur,)
A wandering youth, I listen'd with delight
To pastoral melody or warlike air,
Drawn from the chords of the ancient British harp
By some accomplished master ; while he sate
Amid the quiet of the green recess,
And there did inexhaustibly dispense
An interchange of soft or solemn tunes,
Tender or blithe ; now, as the varying mood
Of his own spirit urged — now as a voice
From youth or maiden, or some honor'd chief
Of his compatriot villagers (that hung
Around him, drinking in the impassion'd notes
Of the time-hallow'd minstrelsy) required
For their heart's ease or pleasure. Strains of power
Were they, to seize and occupy the sense ;
But to a higher mark than song can reach
Rose this pure eloquence. And, when the stream
Which overflow'd the soul was pass'd away,
A consciousness remain'd that it had left,
Deposited upon the silent shore
Of memory, images and precious thoughts,
That shall not die, and cannot be destroy'd.

“ These grassy heaps lie amicably close,”
Said I, “ like surges heaving in the wind
Upon the surface of a mountain pool :
Whence comes it, then, that yonder we behold
Five graves, and only five, that lie apart,
Unsociable company and sad ;
And, furthermore, appearing to encroach
On the smooth playground of the village-school ? ”

The Vicar answer'd : “ No disdainful pride
In them who rest beneath, nor any course
Of strange or tragic accident, hath help'd

To place those hillocks in that lonely guise.
Once more look forth, and follow with your eyes
The length of road which from yon mountain's base
Through bare enclosures stretches, till its line
Is lost among a little tuft of trees ;
Then, reappearing in a moment, quits
The cultured fields, and up the heathy waste,
Mounts, as you see, in mazes serpentine,
Towards an easy outlet of the vale,
That little shady spot, that sylvan tuft,
By which the road is hidden, also hides
A cottage from our view ; though I discern
(You scarcely can) amid its sheltering trees
The smokeless chimney-top. All unembower'd
And naked stood that lowly parsonage
(For such in truth it is, and appertains
To a small chapel in the vale beyond)
When hither came its last inhabitant.

“ Rough and forbidding were the choicest roads
By which our northern wilds could then be cross'd ;
And into most of these secluded vales
Was no access for wain, heavy or light.
So, at his dwelling-place the priest arrived
With store of household goods, in panniers slung
On sturdy horses graced with jingling bells,
And on the back of more ignoble beast,
That, with like burthen of effects most prized
Or easiest carried, closed the motley train.
Young was I then, a school-boy of eight years ;
But still, methinks, I see them as they pass'd
In order, drawing tow'rds their wish'd-for home,
Rock'd by the motion of a trusty ass
Two ruddy children hung, a well-poised freight,
Each in his basket nodding drowsily ;
Their bonnets, I remember, wreathed with flowers,
Which told that 'twas the pleasant month of June ;

And, close behind, the comely matron rode,
A woman of soft speech and gracious smile,
And with a lady's mien.—From far they came,
Even from Northumbrian hills; yet theirs had been
A merry journey, rich in pastime, cheer'd
By music, prank, and laughter-stirring jest;
And freak put on, and arch word dropp'd, to swell
The cloud of fancy and uncouth surmise
That gather'd round the slowly-moving train.
'Whence do they come? and with what errand charged?
Belong they to the fortune-telling tribe
Who pitch their tents beneath the green-wood tree?
Or are they strollers, furnish'd to enact
Fair Rosamond, and the Children of the Wood,
And, by that whisker'd tabby's aid, set forth
The lucky venture of sage Whittington,
When the next village hears the show announced
By blast of trumpet!' Plenteous was the growth
Of such conjectures, overheard, or seen
On many a staring countenance portray'd
Of boor or burgher, as they march'd along.
And more than once their steadiness of face
Was put to proof, and exercise supplied
To their inventive humour, by stern looks,
And questions in authoritative tone,
From some staid guardian of the public peace,
Checking the sober steed on which he rode,
In his suspicious wisdom! oftener still
By notice indirect, or blunt demand
From traveller halting in his own despite,
A simple curiosity to ease:
Of which adventures, that beguiled and cheer'd
Their grave migration, the good pair would tell,
With undiminish'd glee, in hoary age.

“A priest he was by function; but his course
From his youth up, and high as manhood's noon

(The hour of life to which he then was brought,)
Had been irregular ; I might say, wild ;
By books unsteadied, by his pastoral care
Too little check'd. An active, ardent mind ;
A fancy pregnant with resource and scheme
To cheat the sadness of a rainy day ;
Hands apt for all ingenious arts and games ;
A generous spirit, and a body strong
To cope with stoutest champions of the bowl ;
Had earn'd for him sure welcome, and the rights
Of a prized visitant, in the jolly hall
Of a country squire ; or at the statelier board
Of duke or earl, from scenes of courtly pomp
Withdraw, — to while away the summer hours
In condescension among rural guests.

“ With these high comrades he had revell'd long,
Had frolic'd many a year ; a simple clerk
By hopes of coming patronage beguiled
And vex'd until the weary heart grew sick ;
And so, abandoning each higher aim
And all his showy friends, at length he turn'd
For a life's stay, though slender, yet assured,
To this remote and humble chapelry ;
Which had been offer'd to his doubtful choice
By an unthought-of-patron. Bleak and bare
They found the cottage, their allotted home :
Naked without, and rude within ; a spot
With which the scantily-provided cure
Not long had been endow'd ; and far remote
The chapel stood, divided from that house
By an unpeopled tract of mountain waste.
Yet cause was none, whate'er regret might hang
On his own mind, to quarrel with the choice
Or the necessity that fix'd him here ;
Apart from old temptations, and constrain'd
To punctual labour in his sacred charge.

See him a constant preacher to the poor !
And visiting, though not with saintly zeal,
Yet, when need was, with no reluctant will,
The sick in body, or distress'd in mind ;
And, by as salutary change compell'd,
Month after month, in that obscure abode
To rise from timely sleep, and meet the day
With no engagement, in his thoughts, more proud
Or splendid than his garden could afford,
His fields, or mountains by the heath-cock ranged,
Or these wild brooks ; from which he now return'd
Contentedly to make a temperate meal
At his own board, where sat his gentle mate
And three fair children plentifully fed,
Though simply, from their little household farm ;
With acceptable treat of fish or fowl
By nature yielded to his practised hand ; —
To help the small but certain comings-in
Of that spare benefice. Yet not the less
Theirs was a hospitable board, and theirs
A charitable door. So days and years
Pass'd on ; — the inside of that rugged house
Was trimm'd and brighten'd by the matron's care,
And gradually enriched with things of price,
Which might be lack'd for use or ornament.
What, though no soft and costly sofa there
Insidiously stretch'd out its lazy length,
And no vain mirror glitter'd on the walls,
Yet were the windows of the low abode
By shutters weather-fended, which at once
Repell'd the storm and deaden'd its loud roar.
There, snow-white curtains hung in decent folds ;
Tough moss, and long-enduring mountain plants,
That creep along the ground with sinuous trail,
Were nicely braided ; and composed a work
Like Indian mats, that with appropriate grace
Lay at the threshold and the inner doors ;

And a fair carpet, woven by home-spun wool,
But tinctur'd daintily with florid hues,
For seemliness and warmth, on festive days
Cover'd the smooth blue slabs of mountain stone
With which the parlour floor, in simplest guise
Of pastoral homesteads, had been long inlaid.
These pleasing works the housewife's skill produced :
Meanwhile the unsedentary master's hand
Was busier with his task — to rid, to plant,
To rear for food, for shelter, and delight ;
A thriving covert ! And when wishes, form'd
In youth, and sanction'd by the riper mind,
Restored me to my native valley, here
To end my days ; well pleased was I to see
The once bare cottage, on the mountain side,
Screen'd from assault of every bitter blast ;
While the dark shadows of the summer leaves
Danced in the breeze, upon its mossy roof.
Time, which thus had afforded willing help
To beautify with Nature's fairest growth
This rustic tenement, had gently shed,
Upon its master's frame a wintry grace ;
The comeliness of unenfeebled age.
But how could I say, gently ? for he still Retain'd a flashing eye, a burning palm,
A stirring foot, and head which beats at nights
Upon its pillow with a thousand schemes.
Few likings had he dropp'd, few pleasures lost ;
Generous and charitable, prompt to serve ;
And still his harsher passions kept their hold —
Anger and indignation. Still he loved
The sound of titled names, and talk'd in glee
Of long-past banquetings with high-born friends :
Then, from those lulling fits of vain delight
Uproused by recollected injury, rail'd
At their false ways disdainfully, — and oft
In bitterness, and with a threatening eye

Of fire, incensed beneath its hoary brow.
These transports, with staid looks of pure good-will,
And with soft smile his consort would reprove.
She, far behind him in the race of years,
Yet, keeping her first mildness, was advanced
Far nearer, in the habit of her soul,
To that still region wither all are bound.
Him might we liken to the setting sun
As I have seen it on some gusty day
Struggling and bold, and shining from the west
With an inconstant and mellow'd light ;
She was a soft attendant cloud, that hung
As if with wish to veil the restless orb,
From which it did itself imbibe a ray
Of pleasing lustre. — But no more of this ;
I better love to sprinkle on the sod
Which now divides the pair, or rather say
Which still unites them, praises, like heaven's dew,
Without distinction, falling upon both.
Yoke-fellows were they long and well approved
To endure and to perform.

“ With frugal pain

Yet in a course of generous discipline,
Did this poor churchman and his consort rear
Their progeny. Of three — sent forth to try
The paths of fortune in the open world,
One, not endow'd with firmness to resist
The suit of pleasure, to his native vale
Return'd and humbly till'd his father's glebe.
The youngest daughter, too, in duty stay'd
To lighten her declining mother's care.
But, ere the bloom was pass'd away which health
Preserved to adorn a cheek no longer young,
Her heart, in course of nature, finding place
For new affections, to the holy state
Of wedlock they conducted her ; but still

The bride adhering to those filial cares,
Dwelt with her mate beneath her father's roof.

“Our very first in eminence of years
This old man stood, the patriarch of the vale!
And, to his unmolested mansion, death
Had never come through space of forty years;
Sparing both old and young in that abode.
Suddenly then they disappear'd: not twice
Had summer scorch'd the fields; nor twice had fallen,
On those high peaks, the first autumnal snow,
Before the greedy visiter was closed,
And the long privileged house left empty — swept
As by a plague: yet no rapacious plague
Had been among them; all was gentle death,
One after one, with intervals of peace.
A happy consummation! an accord
Sweet, perfect, to be wish'd for! save that here
Was something which to mortal sense might sound
Like harshness, — that the old grey-headed sire,
The oldest, he was taken last, survived
When the meek partner of his age, his son,
His daughter, and that late and high-prized gift,
His little smiling grandchild, were no more.

“All gone, all vanish'd! he deprived and bare,
How will he face the remnant of his life?
What will become of him?’ we said, and mused
In sad conjectures — ‘Shall we meet him now
Haunting with rod and line the craggy brooks?
Or shall we overhear him, as we pass,
Striving to entertain the lonely hours
With music?’ (for he had not ceased to touch
The harp or viol which himself had framed,
For their sweet purposes, with perfect skill.)
‘What titles will he keep? will he remain
Musician, gardener, builder, mechanist,

A planter and a rearer from the seed?
A man of hope and forward-looking mind
Even to the last! — Such was he, unsubdued.
But Heaven was gracious; yet a little while,
And this survivor, with his cheerful throng
Of open schemes, and all his inward hoard
Of unsunn'd griefs, too many and too keen,
Was overcome by unexpected sleep,
In one blest moment. Like a shadow thrown Softly and lightly from a passing cloud,
Death fell upon him, while reclined he lay
For noontide solace on the summer grass,
The warm lap of his mother earth: and so,
Their lenient terms of separation past
That family (whose graves you there behold)
By yet a higher privilege once more
Were gathered to each other.”

Calm of mind

And silence waited on these closing words;
Until the Wanderer (whether moved by fear
Lest in these passages of life were some
That might have touched the sick heart of his friend
Too nearly, or intent to reinforce
His own firm spirit in degree depress'd
By tender sorrow for our mortal state)
Thus silence broke: — “Behold a thoughtless man
From vice and premature decay preserved
By useful habits, to a fitter soil
Transplanted ere too late. — The hermit, lodged
In the untrodden desert, tells his beads,
With each repeating its allotted prayer,
And thus divides and thus relieves the time;
Smooth task, with his compared, whose mind could string
Not scantily, bright minutes on the thread
Of keen domestic anguish; and beguiled
A solitude, unchosen, unprofess'd,

Till gentlest death released him. Far from us
 Be the desire — too curiously to ask
 How much of this is but the blind result
 Of cordial spirits and vital temperament,
 And what to higher powers is justly due.
 But you, sir, know that in a neighbouring vale
 A priest abides before whose life such doubts*

* A long and interesting account of the subject of our poet's eulogy will be found in the notes written by him on the Duddon Sonnets: from which we learn that the Rev. Robert Walker was born in 1709, and was the youngest of twelve children, and, being sickly in youth, "was brought up a scholar." After acting for some time in the capacity of schoolmaster, he was ordained, and became curate of Seathwaite, where he remained till his death, sixty-six years afterwards; having attained the patriarchal age of ninety-three. He chose Seathwaite in preference to Torver, which was offered to him, as there was a cottage attached, and he wished to marry; the yearly income of each of these places being at that time, £5. His wife, he informs us, brought him to the value of £40 for her fortune. They had a family of twelve children, of whom eight lived; these he educated respectably; one became a clergyman. Robert Walker is described as hospitable and generous to the needy; and, although the income of his curacy never exceeded £50 per annum, he left £2,000 to his family.

The then Bishop of Chester, recommended the joining of the curacy of Ulpha to that of Seathwaite, the united incomes being about £17, and the nomination was offered to Robert Walker, but he declined it, lest it should "appear covetous in him." "What a contrast," adds Wordsworth, "does the life of this obscurely-seated and, in a point of worldly wealth, poorly-repaid churchman, present to that of Cardinal Wolsey!"

"O 'tis a burthen, Cromwell, 'tis a burthen Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven."

The house of Robert Walker is described as a nursery of virtue—the family all industrious and amiable. He himself educated, without charge, the children of the whole parish, whilst spinning wool wherewith to clothe his household. He was at once the pastor, lawyer, scrivener for the whole district; for some of these services he was paid, and to all those occupations and means of increasing his income, he added, strangely enough, that of keeping an ale-house.

Fall to the ground ; whose gifts of nature lie
Retired from notice, lost in attributes
Of reason, honourably effaced by debts
Which her poor treasure-house is content to owe,
And conquests over her dominion gain'd,
To which her forwardness must needs submit.
In this one man is shewn a temperance, proof
Against all trials ; industry severe
And constant as the motion of the day ;
Stern self-denial round him spread, with shade
That might be deem'd forbidding, did not there
All generous feelings flourish and rejoice ;
Forbearance, charity in deed and thought,
And resolution competent to take
Out of the bosom of simplicity
All that her holy customs recommend,
And the best ages of the world prescribe.
Preaching, administering, in every work
Of his sublime vocation, in the walks
Of worldly intercourse 'twixt man and man,
And in his humble dwelling, he appears
A labourer, with moral virtue girt,
With spiritual graces, like a glory, crown'd."

"Doubt can be none," the Pastor said, "for whom
This portraiture is sketch'd. The great, the good,
The well-beloved, the fortunate, the wise, —
These titles emperors and chiefs have borne,
Honour assumed or given : and him the 'Wonderful,'

His extraordinary thrift and his undoubted disinterestedness, led the simple dalesmen to confer on him the title of "Wonderful." The £2,000, however, which he left from such slender means, no doubt, mainly contributing to obtain for him that title. But those who wish to form a fair estimate of the character of this worthy man, should temper down Wordsworth's somewhat poetical description of him by a perusal of the more matter-of-fact statements of the amusing writer of "Ravings and Ramblings round Coniston."

Our simple shepherds, speaking from the heart,
Deservedly have styled.— From his abode
In a dependent chapelry, that lies
Behind yon hill, a poor and rugged wild,
Which in his soul he lovingly embraced—
And, having once espoused, would never quit;
Hither, ere long, that lowly, great, good man
Will be convey'd. An unelaborate stone
May cover him; and by its help, perchance,
A century shall hear his name pronounced,
With images attendant on the sound;
Then shall the slowly-gathering twilight close
In utter night; and of his course remain
No cognizable vestiges, no more
Than of this breath, which frames itself in words
To speak of him, and instantly dissolves.
Noise is there not enough in doleful war,
But that the heaven-born poets must stand forth,
And lend the echoes of his sacred shell,
To multiply and aggravate the din?
Pangs are there not enough in hopeless love—
And, in requited passion, all too much
Of turbulence, anxiety, and fear—
But that the minstrel of the rural shade
Must tune his pipe, insidiously to nurse
The perturbation in the suffering breast,
And propagate its kind, where'er he may?
Ah who (and with such rupture as befits
The hallow'd theme) will rise and celebrate
The good man's deeds and purposes; retrace
His struggles, his discomfiture deplore,
His triumphs hail, and glorify his end?
That virtue, like the fumes and vapoury clouds
Through fancy's heat redounding in the brain,
And like the soft infections of the heart,
By charm of measured words may spread through fields
And cottages; and piety survive

Upon the lips of men in hall or bower ;
Not for reproof, but high and warm delight,
And grave encouragement, by song inspired.
Vain thought ! but wherefore murmur or repine ;
The memory of the just survives in heaven :
And, without sorrow, will this ground receive
That venerable clay. Meanwhile the best
Of what it holds confines us to degrees
In excellence less difficult to reach,
And milder worth : nor need we travel far
From those to whom our last regards were paid
For such example.

Almost at the root
Of that tall pine, the shadow of whose bare
And slender stem, while here I sit at eve,
Oft stretches tow'ards me, like a long straight path
Traced faintly in the green-sward ; there beneath
A plain blue stone, a gentle dalesman lies,
From whom, in early childhood, was withdrawn
The precious gift of hearing. He grew up
From year to year in loneliness of soul ;
And this deep mountain valley was to him
Soundless, with all its streams. The bird of dawn
Did never rouse this cottager from sleep
With startling summons ; nor for his delight
The vernal cuckoo shouted ; not for him
Murmur'd the labouring bee. When stormy winds
Were working the broad bosom of the lake
Into a thousand thousand sparkling waves,
Rocking the trees, or driving cloud on cloud
Along the sharp edge of yon lofty crags,
The agitated scene before his eye
Was silent as a picture : evermore
Were all things silent, whereso'er he moved ;
Yet, by the solace of his own pure thoughts
Upheld, he duteously pursued the round

Of rural labours ; the steep mountain-side
Ascended with his staff and faithful dog ;
The plough he guided, and the scythe he sway'd ;
And the ripe corn before his sickle fell
Among the jocund reapers. For himself,
All watchful and industrious as he was,
He wrought not ; neither flock nor field he own'd ;
No wish for wealth had place within his mind ;
Nor husband's love, nor father's hope or care.
Though born a younger brother, need was none
That from the floor of his paternal home
He should depart, to plant himself anew.
And when, mature in manhood, he beheld
His parents laid in earth, no loss ensued
Of rights to him ; but he remain'd well pleased,
By the pure bond of independent love,
An inmate of a second family,
The fellow-labourer and friend of him
To whom the small inheritance had fallen.
Nor deem that his mild presence was a weight
That press'd upon his brother's house, for books
Were ready comrades whom he could not tire,
Of whose society the blameless man
Was never satiate. Their familar voice,
Even to old age, with unabated charm
Beguiled his leisure hours, refresh'd his thoughts :
Beyond its natural elevation raised
His introverted spirit, and bestow'd
Upon his life an outward dignity
Which all acknowledged. The dark winter night,
The stormy day, had each its own resource ;
Song of the muses, sage historic tale,
Science severe, or word of Holy Writ
Announcing immortality and joy
To the assembled spirits of the just,
From imperfections and decay secure.
Thus soothed at home, thus busy in the field,

To no perverse suspicion he gave way,
No languor, peevishness, nor vain complaint :
And they, who were about him, did not fail
In reverence, or in courtesy ; they prized
His gentle manners ; and his peaceful smiles,
The gleams of his slow-varying countenance,
Were met with answering sympathy and love.

“ At length, when sixty years and five were told
A slow disease insensibly consumed
The powers of nature ; and a few short steps
Of friends and kindred bore him from his home
(Yon cottage shaded by the woody crags)
To the profounder stillness of the grave.
Nor was his funeral denied the grace
Of many tears, virtuous and thoughtful grief ;
Heart-sorrow render'd sweet by gratitude.
And now that monumental stone preserves
His name, and unambitiously relates
How long, and by what kindly outward aids,
And in what pure contentedness of mind,
The sad privation was by him endured.
And yon tall pine-tree, whose composing sound
Was wasted on the good man's living ear,
Hath now its own peculiar sanctity ;
And, as the touch of each wandering breeze,
Murmurs, not idly, o'er his peaceful grave.

“ Soul-cheering light, most bountiful of things !
Guide on our way, mysterious comforter !
Whose sacred influence spread through earth and heaven
We all too thanklessly participate,
Thy gifts were utterly withheld from him
Whose place of rest is near yon ivied porch.
Yet, of the wild brooks ask if he complain'd ;
Ask of the channell'd river if they held
A safer, easier, more determined course.
What terror doth it strike into the mind

To think of one, who cannot see, advancing
 Towards some precipice's airy brink !
 But, timely warn'd he would have stay'd his steps ;
 Protected, say enlighten'd, by his ear,
 And on the very brink of vacancy
 Not more endanger'd than a man whose eye
 Beholds the gulf beneath. No flow'ret blooms*

* In Mr. Atkinson's "Worthies of Westmorland," we are informed that this whole passage is accurately descriptive of John Gough, an esteemed friend of Wordsworth's. John Gough was generally reputed one of the first mathematicians of his age. As a mathematical teacher he was eminently successful. Whewell and King (senior wranglers) were among his many distinguished pupils : and the celebrated Dr. Dalton was for some time his pupil in mathematics and experimental philosophy. All these acquirements were made by a man who had been deprived of eyesight by an attack of small pox when he was between two and three years of age. Botany was one of his most cherished pursuits, and a circumstance is recorded which attests at once to his astonishing memory and almost incredible nicety of touch. Wordsworth in his elegiac verses over his brother, had beautifully described the silene acaulis, or moss campion,

" And let me calmly bless the power
 That meets me in this unknown flower,
 Affecting type of him I mourn.
 * * * * *
 He would have loved thy modest place
 Meek flower ! To him I should have said,
 It grows upon its native bed,
 Beside our parting place ;
There cleaving to the ground it lies
With multitude of purple eyes
Spangling, a cushion green-like moss."

There is every reason to believe that the whole passage, especially those parts of it descriptive of the plant, arrested Gough's attention and excited his curiosity.

Wordsworth published the lines in 1805, and Gough examined the plant in 1817, so that nearly twelve years had elapsed since he had heard the description of it read, and from its description alone it lived upon his touch, so that when a specimen was put into his hands, he said immediately, "I have never examined this plant before, but it is silene acaulis."

Throughout the lofty range of these rough hills,
Or in the woods, that could from him conceal
Its birthplace ; none whose figure did not live
Upon his touch. The bowels of the earth
Enrich'd with knowledge his industrious mind ;
The ocean paid him tribute from the stores
Lodged in her bosom ; and by science led,
His genius mounted to the plains of heaven.
Methinks I see him : how his eyeballs roll'd
Beneath his ample brow, in darkness pair'd,—
But each instinct with spirit ; and the frame
Of the whole countenance alive with thought,
Fancy, and understanding ; while the voice
Discoursed of natural and moral truth
With eloquence, and such authentic power,
That, in his presence, humbler knowledge stood
Abash'd, and tender pity overawed."

"A noble, and, to unreflecting minds,
A marvellous spectacle," the Wanderer said,
"Beings like these present ! But proofs abound
Upon the earth that faculties, which seem Extinguish'd, do not, therefore, cease to be.
And to the mind among her powers of sense
This transfer is permitted,—not alone
That the bereft may win their recompence ;
But for remoter purposes of love
And charity ; not last nor least for this,
That to the imagination may be given
A type and shadow of an awful truth,
How, likewise, under sufferance divine,
Darkness is banish'd from the realms of death,
By man's imperishable spirit quell'd.
Unto the men who see not as we see,
Futurity was thought, in ancient times,
To be laid open, and they prophesied.
And know we not that from the blind have flow'd

The highest, holiest, raptures of the lyre ;
And wisdom married to immortal verse ? ”

Among the humbler worthies, at our feet
Lying insensible to human praise,
Love, or regret — whose lineaments would next
Have been portray'd, I guess not ; but it chanced
That near the quiet churchyard were we sate,
A team of horses and a pond'rous freight
Pressing behind, adown a rugged slope,
Whose sharp descent confounded their array,
Came at that moment, ringing noisily.

“ Here,” said the Pastor “ do we muse, and mourn
The waste of death ; and lo ! the giant oak
Stretch'd on his bier ! that massy timber-wain ;
Nor fail to note the man who guides the team.”

He was a peasant of the lowest class :
Gray locks profusely round his temples hung
In clust'ring curls, like ivy, which the bite
Of winter cannot thin ; the fresh air lodged
Within his cheek, as light within a cloud ;
And he return'd our greeting with a smile.
When he had pass'd, the Solitary spake :
“ A man he seems of cheerful yesterdays
And confident to-morrow ; with a face
Not worldly-minded ; for it bears too much
Of Nature's impress, — gaiety and health,
Freedom and hope ; but keen, withal, and shrewd,
His gestures note, — and hark ! his tones of voice
Are all vivacious as his mien and looks.”

The Pastor answer'd : — “ You have read him well.
Year after year is added to his store
With silent increase ; summers, winters — past,
Past or to come ; yea, boldly might I say,

Ten summers and ten winters of the space
That lies beyond life's ordinary bounds,
Upon his sprightly vigour cannot fix
The obligation of an anxious mind,
A pride in having, or a fear to lose ;
Possess'd like outskirts of some large domain,
By any one more thought of than by him
Who holds the land in fee, its careless lord !
Yet is the creature rational — endow'd
With foresight ; hears, too, every Sabbath-day,
The Christian promise with attentive ear,
Nor disbelieves the tidings which he hears.
Meanwhile the incense, offer'd up by him
Is of the kind which beasts and birds present
In grove or pasture ; cheerfulness of soul,
From trepidation and repining free.
How many scrupulous worshippers fall down
Upon their knees, and daily homage pay
Less worthy, less religious even, than his !

“ This qualified respect, the old man's due,
Is paid without reluctance ; but in truth,”
Said the good Vicar with a fond half smile,
“ I feel at times a motion of despite Towards one, whose bold contrivances and skill,
As you have seen, bear such conspicuous part
In works of havoc ; taking from these vales,
One after one, their proudest ornaments.
Full oft his doings leave me to deplore
Tall ash-tree sown by winds, by vapours nursed,
In the dry crannies of the pendent rocks ;
Light birch, aloft upon the horizon's edge,
Transparent texture, framing in the east
A veil of glory for the ascending moon ;
And oak whose roots by noontide dew were damp'd,
And on whose forehead inaccessible
The raven lodged in safety. Many a ship

Launch'd into Morcamb Bay, hath owed to him
Her strong knee-timbers, and the mast that bears
The loftiest of her pendants. Help he gives
To lordly mansion rising far or near ;
The enormous wheel that turns ten thousand spindles,
And the vast engine labouring in the mine,
Content with meaner prowess, must have lack'd
The trunk and body of their marvellous strength,
If this undaunted enterprise had fail'd
Among the mountain coves, or keen research
In forest, park, or chase. Yon household fir,
A guardian planted to fence off the blast,
But towering high the roof above, as if
Its humble destination were forgot ;
That sycamore, which annually holds
Within its shade, as in a stately tent
On all sides open to the fanning breeze,
A grave assemblage, seated while they shear
The fleece-encumber'd flock — the ' Joyful Elm,' Around whose trunk the lasses dance in May,
And the ' Lord's Oak ' would plead their several rights
In vain, if he were master of their fate.
Not one would have his pitiful regard,
For prized accommodation, pleasant use,
For dignity, for old acquaintance' sake,
For ancient custom or distinguish'd name.
His sentence to the axe would doom them all.
But green in age and lusty as he is,
And promising to stand from year to year,
Less, as might seem, in rivalry with men
Than with the forest's more enduring growth,
His own appointed hour will come at last ;
And, like the haughty spoilers of the world,
This keen destroyer, in his turn, must fall.

“ Now from the living, pass we once again ;
From age,” the Priest continued, “ turn your thoughts ;—

From age, that often unlamented drops,
And mark that daisied hillock, three spans long.
Seven lusty sons sate daily round the board
Of Gold-rill side; and when the hope had ceased
Of other progeny, a daughter then
Was given, the crowning glory of the whole !
Welcomed with joy, whose penetrating power
Was not unfelt amid that heavenly calm
With which by nature every mother's soul
Is stricken, in the moment when her throes
Are ended, and her ears have heard the cry
Which tells her that a living child is born,
And she lies conscious in a blissful rest,
That the dread storm is weather'd by them both.

“ The father — him at this unlook'd-for gift
A bolder transport seizes. From the side
Of his bright hearth, and from his open door,
And from the laurel-shaded seat thereby,
Day after day the gladness is diffused
To all that come, and almost all that pass ;
Invited, summon'd, to partake the cheer
Spread on the never-empty board, and drink
Health and good wishes to his new-born girl,
From cups replenish'd by his joyous hand.
Those seven fair brothers variously were moved.
Each by the thoughts best suited to his years :
But most of all, and with most thankful mind,
The hoary grandsire felt himself enrich'd ;
A happiness that ebb'd not, but remain'd
To fill the total measure of the soul !
From the low tenement, his own abode,
Whither, as to a little private cell,
He had withdrawn from bustle, care, and noise,
To spend the sabbath of old age in peace,
Once every day he duteously repair'd
To rock the cradle of the slumbering babe :

For in that female infant's name he heard ;
The silent name of his departed wife ;
Heart-stirring music ! hourly heard that name ;
Full blest he was, ' Another Margaret Green,'
Oft did he say, ' was come to Gold-rill side.'

" Oh ! pang unthought of, as the precious boon
Itself had been unlook-for : — oh ! dire stroke
Of desolating anguish for them all !
Just as the child could totter on the floor,
And by some friendly finger's help upstay'd,
Range round the garden-walk, whose low ground flowers
Were peeping forth, shy messengers of spring, —
Even at that hopeful time, — the winds of March,
One sunny day, smiting insiduously,
Raised in the tender passage of the throat
Viewless obstruction ; whence, all unforwarn'd,
The household lost their hope and soul's delight,
But Providence, that gives and takes away
By His own law, is merciful and just ;
Time wants not power to soften all regrets,
And prayer and thought can bring to worst distress
Due resignation. Therefore, though some tears
Fail not to spring from either parent's eye
Oft as they hear of sorrow like their own,
Yet this departed little one, too long
The innocent troubler of their quiet, sleeps
In what may now be call'd a peaceful grave.

" On a bright day, the brightest of the year,
These mountains echo'd with an unknown sound,
A volley, thrice repeated o'er the corse
Let down into the hollow of that grave,
Whose shelving sides are red with naked mould.
Ye rains of April, duly wet this earth !
Spare, burning sun of midsummer, these sods,
That they may knit together, and therewith

Our thoughts unite in kindred quietness !
Nor so the valley shall forget her loss.
Dear youth, by young and old alike beloved,
To me as precious as my own ! — Green herbs
May creep (I wish that they would softly creep)
Over thy last abode, and we may pass
Reminded less imperiously of thee :
The ridge itself may sink into the breast
Of earth, the great abyss, and be no more ;
Yet shall not thy remembrance leave our hearts
Thy image disappear. The mountain-ash,
Deck'd with autumnal berries that outshine
Spring's richest blossoms, yields a splendid show,
Amid the leafy woods ; and ye have seen
By a brook-side, or solitary tarn,
How she her station doth adorn,— the pool
Glows at her feet, and all the gloomy rocks
Are brighten'd round her. In his native vale
Such and so glorious did this youth appear ;
A sight that kindled pleasure in all hearts
By his ingenuous beauty, by the gleam
Of his fair eyes, by his capacious brow,
By all the graces with which Nature's hand
Had bounteously array'd him. As old bards
Tell in their idle songs of wandering gods,
Pan or Apollo, veil'd in human form ;
Yet, like the sweet-breath'd violet of the shade,
Discover'd in their own despite to sense
Of mortals, (if such fables without blame
May find chance mention on this sacred ground,)
So, through a simple rustic garb's disguise,
And through the impediment of rural cares,
In him reveal'd a scholar's genius shone ;
And so, not wholly hidden from men's sight,
In him the spirit of a hero walk'd
Our unpretending valley.— How the quoit
Whizz'd from the stripling's arm ! If touch'd by him,

The inglorious football mounted to the pitch
Of the lark's flight, or shaped a rainbow curve,
Aloft, in prospect of the shouting field !
The indefatigable fox had learn'd
To dread his perseverance in the chase. .
With admiration he could lift his eyes
To the wide-ruling eagle, and his hand
Was loath to assault the majesty he loved ;
Else had the strongest fastnesses proved weak
To guard the royal brood. The sailing glead,
The wheeling swallow, and the darting snipe,
The sportive sea-gull dancing with the waves,
And cautious water-fowl, from distant climes,
Fix'd at their seat,— the centre of the mere,
Were subject to young Oswald's steady aim.

“ From Gallia's coast a tyrant's threats were hurl'd ;
Our country mark'd the preparations vast
Of hostile forces ; and she call'd — with voice
That fill'd her plains, and reach'd her utmost shores,
And in remotest vales was heard — To arms !
Then, for the first time, here you might have seen
The shepherd's gray to martial scarlet changed,
That flash'd uncouthly through the woods and fields.
Ten hardy striplings, all in bright attire,
And graced with shining weapons, weekly march'd
From this lone valley to a central spot,
Where, in assemblage with the flower and choice
Of the surrounding district, they might learn
The rudiments of war ; ten — hardy, strong,
And valiant ; but young Oswald, like a chief,
And yet a modest comrade, led them forth
From their shy solitude, to face the world,
With a gay confidence and seemly pride :
Measuring the soil beneath their happy feet
Like youths released from labour, and yet bound
To most laborious service, though to them

A festival of unencumber'd ease ;
The inner spirit keeping holiday,
Like vernal ground to Sabbath sunshine left.

“Oft have I mark'd him, at some leisure hour,
Stretch'd on the grass or seated in the shade
Among his fellows, while an ample map
Before their eyes lay carefully outspread
From which the gallant teacher would discourse,
Now pointing this way and now that.—‘Here flows,’
Thus would he say, ‘the Rhine, that famous stream !
Eastward, the Danube, tow’rds this inland sea,
A mightier river, winds from realm to realm ;
And, like a serpent, shews his glittering back
Bespotted with innumerable isles.
Here reigns the Russian, there the Turk ; observe
His capital city !’ Thence, along a tract
Of livelier interest to his hopes and fears
His finger-moved, distinguishing the spots
Where wide-spread conflict then most fiercely raged :
Nor left unstigmatised those fatal fields
On which the sons of mighty Germany
Were taught a based submission. ‘Here behold
A nobler race, the Switzers, and their land,
Vales deeper far than these of ours, huge woods,
And mountains white with everlasting snow ?’
And surely he that spake with kindling brow,
Was a true patriot, hopeful as the best
Of that young peasantry who, in our days,
Have fought and perish’d for Helvetia’s right
Ah, not in vain !—or those who, in old time,
For work of happier issue, to the side
Of Tell came trooping from a thousand huts,
When he had risen alone ! No braver youth
Descended from Judea’s heights, to march
With righteous Joshua ; or appear’d in arms
When grove was fell’d, and altar was cast down,

And Gideon blew the trumpet, soul-inflamed,
And strong in hatred of idolatry."

This spoken, from his seat the Pastor rose,
And moved towards the grave. Instinctively
His steps we follow'd; and my voice exclaim'd,
"Power to the oppressors of the world is given,
A might of which they dream not. Oh! the curse,
To be the awakener of divinest thoughts,
Father and founder of exalted deeds:
And, to whole nations bound in servile straits
The liberal donor of capacities
More than heroic! this to be, nor yet
Have sense of one connatural wish, nor yet
Deserve the least return of human thanks;
Winning no recompence but deadly hate
With pity mix'd — astonishment with scorn!"

When these involuntary words had ceased,
The Pastor said: "So Providence is served;
The forkèd weapon of the skies can send Illumination into deep, dark holds,
Which the mild sunbeam hath not power to pierce.
Why do ye quake, intimidated thrones?
For, not unconscious of the mighty debt
Which to outrageous wrong the sufferer owes,
Europe, through all her habitable seats,
Is thirsting for their overthrow, who still Exist, as pagan temples stood of old,
By very horror of their impious rites
Preserved — are suffer'd to extend their pride.
Like cedars on the top of Lebanon
Darkening the sun. But less impatient thoughts,
And love 'all hoping, and expecting all,'
This hallow'd grave demands, where rests in peace
A humble champion of the better cause;
A peasant youth — so call him, for he ask'd

No higher name ; in whom our country shew'd
As in a favourite son, most beautiful.
In spite of vice, and misery, and disease,
Spread with the spreading of her weathly arts,
England, the ancient and the free, appear'd
In him to stand before my swimming eyes
Unconquerably virtuous and secure.
No more of this, lest I offend his dust ;
Short was his life, and a brief tale remains.

“ One summer's day, a day of annual pomp
And solemn chase, from morn to sultry noon
His steps had follow'd, fleetest of the fleet,
The red-deer driven along its native heights
With cry of hound and horn ; and from that toil
Return'd with sinews weaken'd and relax'd,
This generous youth, too negligent of self,
(A natural failing which maturer years
Would have subdued,) took fearlessly — and kept —
His wonted station in the chilling flood,
Among a busy company convened
To wash his father's flock. Convulsions dire
Seized him, that self-same night ; and through the space
Of twelve ensuing days his frame was wrench'd,
Till Nature rested from her work in death.
To him, thus snatch'd away, his comrades paid
A soldier's honours. At his funeral hour
Bright was the sun, the sky a cloudless blue, —
A golden lustre slept upon the hills :
And if by chance a stranger, wand'ring there,
From some commanding eminence had look'd
Down on this spot, well pleased would he have seen
A glittering spectacle ; but every face
Was pallid ; seldom hath that eye been moist
With tears that wept not then ; nor were the few,
Who from their dwellings came not forth to join
In this sad service, less disturb'd than we.

They started at the tributary peal
Of instantaneous thunder, which announced,
Through the still air, the closing of the grave,
And distant mountains echo'd with a sound
Of lamentation never heard before !”

The Pastor ceased. My venerable friend
Victoriously upraised his clear bright eye,
And, when that eulogy was ended, stood
Enrapt, as if his inward sense perceived
The prolongation of some still response,
Sent by the ancient soul of this wide land —
The spirit of its mountains and its seas,
Its cities, temples, fields, its awful power,
Its rights and virtues — by that Deity
Descending and supporting his pure heart
With patriotic confidence and joy,
And, at the last of those memorial words,
The pining Solitary turn'd aside ;
Whether through manly instinct to conceal
Tender emotions spreading from the heart
To his worn cheek ; or with uneasy shame
For those cold humours of habitual spleen,
Which, fondly seeking in dispraise of man,
Solace and self-excuse, had sometimes urged
To self-abuse a not ineloquent tongue.
Right tow'rds the sacred edifice his steps
Had been directed ; and we saw him now
Intent upon a monumental stone,
Whose uncouth form was grafted on the wall,
Or rather seem'd to have grown into the side
Of the rude pile ; as ofttimes trunks of trees,
Where Nature works in wild and craggy spots,
Are seen incorporate with the living rock ;
To indure for aye. The Vicar, taking note
Of his employment, with a courteous smile,
Exclaim'd, “ The sagest antiquary's eye

That task would foil." And with these added words,
He thitherward advanced : " Tradition tells
That, in Eliza's golden days, a knight
Came on a war-horse sumptuously attired,
And fixed his home in this sequester'd vale.
'Tis left untold if here he first drew breath,
Or as a stranger reach'd this deep recess,
Unknowing and unknown. A pleasing thought
I sometimes entertain, that, haply bound
To Scotland's court in service of his queen,
Or sent on mission to some northern chief
Of England's realm, this vale he might have seen
With transient observation ; and thence caught
An image fair, which, bright'ning in his soul
When years admonish'd him of failing strength,
And he no more rejoiced in war's delights,
Had power to draw him from the world,—resolved
To make that paradise his chosen home,
To which his peaceful fancy oft had turn'd.
Vague thoughts are these ; but if belief may rest
Upon unwritten story fondly traced
From sire to son, in this obscure retreat
The knight arrived, with pomp of spear and shield,
And borne upon a charger covered o'er
With gilded housings. And the lofty steed —
His sole companion, and his faithful friend,
Whom he, in gratitude, let loose to range
In fertile pastures — was beheld with eyes
Of admiration and delightful awe,
By those untravell'd dalesmen. With less pride,
Yet free from touch of envious discontent,
They saw a mansion at his bidding rise,
Like a bright star, amid the lowly band
Of their rude homesteads. Here the warrior dwelt,
And in that mansion children of his own,
Or kindred, gather'd round him. As a tree
That falls and disappears, the house is gone :

And, through improvidence, or want of love
For ancient worth and honourable things,
The spear and shield are vanish'd, which the knight
Hung in his rustic hall. One ivied arch
Myself have seen, a gateway, last remains
Of that foundation in domestic care
Raised by his hands. And now no trace is left
Of the mild-hearted champion, save this stone,
Faithless memorial ! and his family name
Borne by yon clustering cottages, that sprang
From out the ruins of his stately lodge ;
These, and the name and title at full length, —
Sir Alfred Irthing — with appropriate words
Accompanied, still extant, in a wreath
Or posy, girding round the several fronts
Of three clear-sounding and harmonious bells,
That in the steeple hang, his pious gift."

"So fails, so languishes, grows dim, and dies,"
The gray-hair'd wanderer pensively exclaim'd,
"All that this world is proud of. From their spheres
The stars of human glory are cast down ; *
Perish the roses and the flowers of kings ;
Princes, and emperors, and the crowns and palms
Of all the mighty, wither'd and consumed !
Nor is power given to lowliest innocence
Long to protect her own. The man himself
Departs ; and soon is spent the line of those
Who, in the bodily image, in the mind,
In heart or soul, in station or pursuit,
Did most resemble him. Degrees and ranks,

* The foundation charter of St. Mary's Abbey, Furness, opens in the following elegant strain : — "Considering every day the uncertainty of life ; that the roses and flowers of kings, emperors, and dukes, and the crowns and palms of all the great, wither and decay, and that all things with uninterrupted course hasten to dissolution and death : I therefore," &c.

Fraternities and orders — heaping high
New wealth upon the burthen of the old,
And placing trust in privilege confirm'd
And re-confirm'd — are scoff'd at with a smile
Of greedy foretaste, from the secret stand
Of desolation aim'd : to slow decline
These yield, and these to sudden overthrow ;
Their virtue, service, happiness, and state
Expire ; and Nature's pleasant robe of green,
Humanity's appointed shroud, enwraps
Their monuments and their memory. The vast frame
Of social nature changes evermore
Her organs and her members, with decay
Restless, and restless generation, powers
And functions dying and produced at need,—
And by this law the mighty whole subsists :
With an ascent and progress in the main ;
Yet, oh ! how disproportion'd to the hopes
And expectations of self-flattering minds !
The courteous knight whose bones are here interr'd,
Lived in an age conspicuous as our own
For strife and ferment in the minds of men ;
Whence alteration, in the forms of things,
Various and vast. A memorable age !
Which did to him assign a pensive lot,
To linger 'mid the last of those bright clouds,
That, on the steady breeze of honour, sail'd
In long procession calm and beautiful.
He, who had seen his own bright order fade,
And its devotion gradually decline,
(While War, relinquishing the lance and shield,
Her temper changed, and bow'd to other laws,)
Had also witness'd, in his morn of life,
That violent commotion, which o'erthrew,
In town, and city, and sequester'd glen,
Altar, and cross, and church of solemn roof,
And old religious house — pile after pile ;

And shook the tenants out into the fields,
Like wild beasts without home ! Their hour was come,
But why no softening thought of gratitude,
No just remembrance, scruple, or wise doubt ?
Benevolence is mild ; nor borrows help,
Save at worst need, from bold impetuous force,
Fitliest allied to anger and revenge.
But human-kind rejoices in the might
Of mutability, and airy hopes,
Dancing around her, hinder and disturb
Those meditations of the soul which feed
The retrospective virtues. Festive songs
Break from the madden'd nations at the sight
Of sudden overthrow ; and cold neglect
Is the sure consequence of slow decay.

“Even,” said the Wanderer, “as that courteous knight
Bound by his vow to labour for redress
Of all who suffer wrong, and to enact
By sword and lance the law of gentleness,
If I may venture of myself to speak,
Trusting that not incongruously I blend
Low things with lofty, I too shall be doom'd
To outlive the kindly use and fair esteem
Of the poor calling which my youth embraced
With no unworthy prospect. But enough ;
Thoughts crowd upon me—and 'twere seemlier now
To stop, and yield our gracious teacher thanks
For the pathetic records which his voice
Hath here deliver'd : words of heartfelt truth,
Tending to patience when affliction strikes ;
To hope and love ; to confident repose
In God ; and reverence for the dust of man.”

THE PARSONAGE.

Pastor's apprehensions that he might have detained his auditors too long — Invitation to his house — Solitary disinclined to comply — Rallies the Wanderer — And somewhat playfully draws a comparison between his itinerant profession and that of the knight-errant — Which leads to Wanderer's giving an account of changes in the country from the manufacturing spirit — Favourable effects — The other side of the picture, and chiefly as it has affected the humbler classes — Wanderer asserts the hollowness of all national grandeur if unsupported by moral worth — Gives instances — Physical science unable to support itself — Lamentations over an excess of manufacturing industry among the humbler classes of society — Picture of a child employed in a cotton-mill — Ignorance and degradation of children among the agricultural population reviewed — Conversation broken off by a renewed invitation from the Pastor — Path leading to his house — Its appearance described — His daughter — His wife — His son (a boy) enters with his companion — Their happy appearance — The Wanderer, how affected by the sight of them.

THE pensive Sceptic of the lonely vale
 To those acknowledgments subscribed his own,
 With a sedate compliance, which the Priest
 Fail'd not to notice, inly pleased, and said : —
 “ If ye, by whom invited, I commenced
 Those narratives of calm and humble life,
 Be satisfied, 'tis well, — the end is gain'd ;
 And, in return for sympathy bestow'd,
 And patient listening, thanks accept from me.
 Life, death, eternity ! momentous themes
 Are these — and might demand a seraph's tongue,
 Were they not equal to their own support ;
 And therefore no incompetence of mine
 Could do them wrong    The universal forms

Of human nature, in a spot like this,
Present themselves at once to all men's view :
Ye wish'd for act and circumstance, that make
The individual known and understood ;
And such as my best judgment could select
From what the place afforded, have been given ;
Though apprehensions cross'd me in the course
Of this self-pleasing exercise, that ye
My zeal to his would liken, who, possess'd
Of some rare gems, or pictures finely wrought,
Unlocks his cabinet, and draws them forth
One after one — soliciting regard
To this, and this, as worthier than the last,
Till the spectator, who awhile was pleased
More than th' exhibitor himself, becomes
Weary and faint, and longs to be released.
But let us hence ! my dwelling is in sight,
And there " —

At this the Solitary shrunk
With backward will ; but, wanting not address
That inward motion to disguise, he said
To his compatriot, smiling as he spake, —
" The peaceable remains of this good knight
Would be disturb'd, I fear, with wrathful scorn,
If consciousness could reach him where he lies
That one, albeit of these degenerate times,
Deploring changes past, or dreading change
Forseen, had dared to couple, even in thought,
The fine vocation of the sword and lance
With the gross aims and body-bending toil
Of a poor brotherhood who walk the earth
Pitied, and, where they are not known, despised.
Yet, by the good knight's leave, the two estates
Are graced with some resemblance. Errant those,
Exiles and wanderers ; and the like are these
Who, with their burthen, traverse hill and dale,

Carrying relief for nature's simple wants.
What though no higher recompence they seek
Than honest maintenance, by irksome toil
Full oft procured, yet such may claim respect,
Among the intelligent, for what this course
Enables them to be and to perform,
Their tardy steps give leisure to observe,
While solitude permits the mind to feel ;
And doth instruct her to supply defects
By the division of her inward self,
For grateful converse : and to the poor men,
As I have heard you boast with honest pride,
Nature is bountiful ; where'er they go,
Kind nature's various wealth is all their own.
Versed in the characters of men ; and bound,
By tie of daily interest, to maintain
Conciliatory manners and smooth speech ;
Such have been, and still are, in their degree,
Examples efficacious to refine
Rude intercourse ; apt instruments to excite,
By importation of unlook'd-for arts,
Barbarian torper, and blind prejudice ;
Raising, through just gradation, savage life
To rustic, and the rustic to urbane.
Within their moving magazines is lodged
Power that comes forth to quicken and exalt
Th' affections seated in the mother's breast,
And in the lover's fancy ; and to feed
The sober sympathies of long-tried friends.
By these itinerants, as experienced men,
Counsel is given ; contention they appease
With healing words ; and in remotest wilds,
Tears wipe away, and pleasant tidings bring ;
Could the proud quest of chivalry do more ? ”

“ Happy,” rejoin'd the Wanderer, “ they who gain
A panegyric from your generous tongue !

But, if to these wayfarers once pertain'd
Aught of romantic interest, 'tis gone ;
Their purer service, in this realm at least,
Is past for ever. An inventive age
Has wrought, if not with speed of magic, yet
To most strange issues. I have lived to mark
A new and unforeseen creation rise
From out the labours of a peaceful land,
Wielding her potent enginery to frame
And to produce, with appetite as keen
As that of war, which rests not night or day,
Industrious to 'destroy ! With fruitless pains
Might one like me now visit many a tract
Which, in his youth, he trod, and trod again,
A lone pedestrian with a scanty freight,
Wish'd for, or welcome, wheresoe'er he came —
Among the tenantry of thorpe and vill ;
Or straggling burgh, of ancient charter proud,
And dignified by battlements and towers
Of some stern castle, mouldering on the brow
Of a green hill or bank of rugged stream.
The footpath faintly mark'd, the horse-track wild,
And formidable length of plashy lane,
(Prized avenues ere others had been shaped
Or easier links connecting place with place),
Have vanish'd — swallow'd up by stately roads,
Easy and bold, that penetrate the gloom
Of Englands farthest glens. The earth has lent
Her waters, air her breezes ; and the sail
Of traffic glides with ceaseless interchange,
Glistening along the low and woody dale,
Or on the naked mountain's lofty side.
Meanwhile, at social industry's command,
How quick, how vast an increase ! From the germ
Of some poor hamlet, rapidly produced
Here a huge town, continuous and compact,
Hiding the face of earth for leagues—and there,

Where not a habitation stood before,
The abodes of men irregularly mass'd
Like trees in forests,—spread through spacious tracts
O'er which the smoke of unremitting fires
Hangs permanent, and plentiful as wreaths
Of vapour glittering in the morning sun.
And, wheresoe'er the traveller turns his steps,
He sees the barren wilderness erased,
Or disappearing; triumph that proclaims
How much the mild directress of the plough
Owes to alliance with these new-born arts!
Hence is the wide sea peopled,—and the shores
Of Britain are resorted to by ships
Freighted from every climate of the world
With the world's choicest produce. Hence that sum
Of keels that rest within her crowded ports
Or ride at anchor in her sounds and bays;
That animating spectacle of sails
Which, through her inland regions, to and fro
Pass with the respirations of the tide,
Perpetual, multitudinous! Finally,
Hence a dread arm of floating power, a voice
Of thunder, daunting those who would approach
With hostile purposes the blessèd isle,
Truth's consecrated residence, the seat
Impregnable of liberty and peace.

“And yet, O happy pastor of a flock
Faithfully watch'd, and, by that loving care
And Heaven's good providence, preserved from taint!
With you I grieve, when on the darker side
Of this great change I look; and there behold,
Through strong temptation of those gainful arts,
Such outrage done to nature as compels
The indignant power to justify herself;
Yea, to avenge her violated rights,
For England's bane. When soothing darkness spreads

O'er hill and dale," the Wanderer thus express'd
His recollections, "and the punctual stars,
While all things else are gathering to their homes,
Advance, and in the firmament of heaven
Glitter—but undisturbing, undisturb'd,
As if their silent company were charged
With peaceful admonitions for the heart
Of all-beholding man, earth's thoughtful lord.
Then in full many a region once like this
The assured domain of calm simplicity
And pensive quiet, an unnatural light,
Prepared for never-resting labour's eyes,
Breaks from a many-window'd fabric huge :
And at the appointed hour a bell is heard,—
Of harsher import than the curfew-knoll
That spake the Norman conqueror's stern behest,
A local summons to unceasing toil !
Disgorged are now the ministers of day ;
And as they issue from the illumined pile,
A fresh band meets them at the crowded door,
And in the courts—and where the rumbling stream,
That turns the multitude of dizzy wheels,
Glares, like a troubled spirit, in its bed
Among the rocks below. Men, maidens, youths,
Mother and little children, boys and girls
Enter, and each the wonted task resumes
Within this temple, where is offer'd up
To gain—the master idol of the realm,
Perpetual sacrifice. Even thus of old
Our ancestors, within the still domain
Of vast cathedral or conventual church,
Their vigils kept ; where tapers day and night
On the dim altar burn'd continually,
In token that the house was evermore
Watching to God. Religious men were they ;
Nor would their reason, tutor'd to aspire
Above this transitory world, allow

That there should pass a moment of the year
When in their land the Almighty's service ceased.

“Triumph who will in these profaner rites
Which we, a generation self-extoll'd,
As zealously perform — I cannot share
His proud complacency : yet I exult,
Casting reserve away — exult to see
An intellectual mastery exercised
O'er the blind elements ; a purpose given,
A perseverance fed ; almost a soul
Imparted to brute matter. I rejoice,
Measuring the force of those gigantic powers
Which by the thinking mind have been compell'd
To serve the will of feeble-bodied man.
For with the sense of admiration blends
The animating hope that time may come,
When, strengthen'd yet not dazzled, by the might
Of this dominion over nature gain'd,
Men of all lands shall exercise the same
In due proportion to their country's need ;
Learning, though late, that all true glory rests,
All praise, all safety, and all happiness,
Upon the moral law. Egyptian Thebes —
Tyre, by the margin of the sounding waves —
Palmyra, central in the desert — fell ;
And the arts died by which they had been raised.
Call Archimedes from his buried tomb
Upon the plain of vanish'd Syracuse,
And feelingly the sage shall make report
How insecure, how baseless in itself,
Is that philosophy whose sway is framed
For mere material instruments — how weak
Those arts, and high inventions, if unpropp'd
By virtue. He, with sighs of pensive grief,
Amid his calm abstractions, would admit
That not the slender privilege is theirs

To save themselves from blank forgetfulness !”

When from the Wanderer's lips these words had fall'n
I said, “ And did in truth these vaunted arts
Possess such privilege, how could we escape
Regret and painful sadness, who revere,
And would preserve, as things above all price,
The old domestic morals of the land,
Her simple manners, and the stable worth
That dignified and cheer'd a low estate ?
Oh ! where is now the character of peace,
Sobriety, and order, and chaste love,
And honest dealing, and untainted speech,
And pure goodwill, and hospitable cheer,
That made the very thought of country life
A thought of refuge for a mind detain'd
Reluctantly amid the bustling crowd ? —
Where now the beauty of the Sabbath kept
With conscientious reverence, as a day
By the almighty Lawgiver pronounced
Holy and blest — and where the winning grace
Of all the lighter ornaments attach'd
To time and season, as the year roll'd round ? ”

“ Fled ! ” was the Wanderer's passionate response ;
“ Fled utterly ! or only to be traced
In a few fortunate retreats like this ;
Which I behold with trembling, when I think
What lamentable change a year — a month —
May bring ; that brook converting as it runs
Into an instrument of deadly bane
For those, who, yet untempted to forsake
The simple occupations of their sires,
Drink the pure water of its innocent stream
With lip almost as pure. Domestic bliss
(Or call it comfort, by a humbler name,)
How art thou blighted for the poor man's heart !

Lo ! in such neighbourhood, from morn to eve,
The habitations empty ! or perchance
The mother left alone, — no helping hand
To rock the cradle of her peevish babe ;
No daughters round her, busy at the wheel,
Or in despatch of each day's little growth
Of household occupation ; no nice arts
Of needlework ; no bustle at the fire,
Where once the dinner was prepared with pride ;
Nothing to speed the day, or cheer the mind ;
Nothing to praise, to teach, or to command !
The father — if perchance he still retain
His old employments — goes to field or wood,
No longer led or follow'd by his sons ;
Idlers perchance they were, — but in his sight ;
Breathing fresh air, and treading the green earth ;
Till their short holiday of childhood ceased,
Ne'er to return ! That birthright now is lost.
Economists will tell you that the state
Thrives by the forfeiture — unfeeling thought,
And false as monstrous ! Can the mother thrive
By the destruction of her innocent sons ?
In whom a premature necessity
Blocks out the forms of nature, preconsumes
The reason, famishes the heart, shuts up
The infant being in itself, and makes
Its very spring a season of decay ?
The lot is wretched, the condition sad,
Whether a pining discontent survive,
And thirst for change ; or habit hath subdued
The soul depress'd ; dejected — even to love
Of her dull tasks, and close captivity.
Oh, banish far such wisdom as condemns
A native Briton to these inward chains,
Fix'd in his soul, so early and so deep,
Without his own consent, or knowledge, fix'd
He is a slave to whom release comes not,

And cannot come. The boy, where'er he turns,
Is still a prisoner ; when the wind is up
Among the clouds and in the ancient woods,
Or when the sun is rising in the heavens,
Quiet and calm. Behold him — in the school
Of his attainments ? no ; but with the air
Fanning his temples under heaven's blue arch.
His raiment, whiten'd o'er with cotton flakes,
Or locks of wool, announces whence he comes.
Creeping his gait and cowering — his lip pale —
His respiration quick and audible ;
And scarcely could you fancy that a gleam
From out those languid eyes could break, or blush
Mantle upon his cheek. Is this the form,
Is that the countenance, and such the port,
Of no mean being ? One who should be clothed
With dignity befitting his proud hope ;
Who, in his very childhood, should appear
Sublime — from present purity and joy !
The limbs increase ; but liberty of mind
Thus gone for ever, this organic frame,
Which from Heaven's bounty we receive, instinct
With light and gladsome motions, soon becomes
Dull, to the joy of her own motions dead ;
And even the touch, so exquisitely pour'd
Through the whole body, with a languid will Performs its functions ; rarely competent
To impress a vivid feeling on the mind
Of what there is delightful in the breeze,
The gentle visitations of the sun,
Or lapse of liquid element — by hand,
Or foot, or lip, in summer's warmth — perceived.
Can hope look forward to a manhood raised
On such foundations ? ”

“ Hope is none for him ! ”

The pale Recluse indignantly exclaim'd,
“ And tens of thousands suffer wrong as deep.

Yet be it ask'd, in justice to our age,
If there were not, before those arts appear'd,
These structures rose, commingling old and young,
And unripe sex with sex, for mutual taint ;
Then if there were not, in our far-famed isle,
Multitudes, who from infancy had breathed
Air unimprison'd and had lived at large ;
Yet walked beneath the sun, in human shape,
As abject as degraded ? At this day,
Who shall enumerate the crazy huts
And tottering hovels, whence do issue forth
A ragged offspring, with their own blanch'd hair
Crown'd like the image of fantastic Fear :
Or wearing, we might say, in that white growth
An ill-adjusted turban for defence
Or fierceness, wreath'd around their sunburnt brows,
By savage nature's unassisted care.
Naked, and colour'd like the soil, the feet
On which they stand ; as if thereby they drew
Some nourishment, as trees do by their roots,
From earth, the common mother of us all.
Are framed to strike dismay, but the outstretch'd hand
And whining voice denote them supplicants
For the least boon that pity can bestow.
Such on the breast of darksome heaths are found ;
And with their parents dwell upon the skirts
Of furze-clad commons ; and are born and rear'd
At the mine's mouth, beneath impending rocks,
Or in the chambers of some natural cave ;
And where their ancestors erected huts,
For the convenience of unlawful gain,
In forest purlieus ; and the like are bred,
All England through, where nooks and slips of ground
Purloin'd in times less jealous than our own,
From the green margin of the public way,
A residence afford them, 'mid the bloom

And gaiety of cultivated fields.
Such (we will hope the lowest in the scale)
Do I remember oftentimes to have seen
'Mid Buxton's dreary heights. Upon the watch,
Till the swift vehicle approach, they stand ;
Then, following closely with the cloud of dust,
An uncouth feat exhibit, and are gone,
Heels over head, like tumblers on a stage.
Up from the ground they snatch the copper coin,
And, on the freight of merry passengers
Fixing a steady eye, maintain their speed ;
And spin — and pant — and overhead again,
Wild pursuivants ! until their breath is lost,
Or bounty tires,—and every face that smiled
Encouragement hath ceased to look that way.
But, like the vagrants of the gipsy tribe,
These, bred to little pleasure in themselves,
Are profitless to others. Turn we then
To Britons born and bred within the pale
Of civil polity, and early train'd
To earn, by wholesome labour in the field,
The bread they eat. A sample should I give
Of what this stock produces to enrich
And beautify the tender age of life,
A sample fairly cull'd — ye would exclaim,
'Is this the whistling ploughboy whose shrill notes.
Impart new gladness to the morning air ?'
Forgive me ! if I venture to suspect
That many, sweet to hear of in soft verse,
Are of no finer frame : his joints are stiff ;
Beneath a cumbrous frock that to the knees
Invests the thriving churl, his legs appear,
Fellows to those which lustily upheld
The wooden stools for everlasting use,
On which our fathers sate. And mark his brow
Under whose shaggy canopy are set
Two eyes, not dim, but of a healthy stare ;

Wide, sluggish, blank, and ignorant, and strange ;
Proclaiming boldly that they never drew
A look or motion of intelligence
From infant conning of the Christ-cross-row
Or puzzling through a primer, line by line,
Till perfect mast'ry crown the pains at last.
What kindly warmth from touch of fost'ring hand,
What penetrating power of sun or breeze,
Shall e'er dissolve the crust wherein his soul
Sleeps, like a caterpillar sheath'd in ice ?
This torpor is no pitiable work
Of modern ingenuity ; no town
Nor crowded city may be tax'd with aught
Or sottish vice or desperate breach of law,
To which in after-years he may be roused.
This boy the fields produce ; his spade and hoe,
The carter's whip which on his shoulder rests
In air high-towering with a boorish pomp,
The sceptre of his sway ; his country's name,
Her equal rights, her churches and her schools,
What have they done for him ? And, let me ask,
For tens of thousands uninform'd as he ?
In brief — what liberty of mind is here ? ”

This cheerful sally pleased the mild good man,
To whom the appeal couch'd in those closing words
Was pointedly address'd ; and to the thoughts
Which, in assent or opposition, rose
Within his mind, he seem'd prepared to give Prompt utterance ; but, rising from our seat,
The hospitable Vicar interposed
With invitation earnestly renew'd.
We follow'd, taking as he led, a path
Along a hedge of stately hollies framed,
Whose flexile boughs, descending with a weight
Of leafy spray, conceal'd the stems and roots
That gave them nourishment. How sweet, methought

When the fierce wind comes howling from the north,
How grateful, this impenetrable screen !
Not shaped by simple wearing of the foot
On rural business passing to and fro
Was the commodious walk ; a careful hand
Had mark'd the line, and strown the surface o'er
With pure cerulean gravel from the heights
Fetch'd by the neighbouring brook. Across the vale
The stately fence accompanied our steps ;
And thus the pathway, by perennial green
Guarded and graced, seem'd fashion'd to unite,
As by a beautiful yet solemn chain,
The Pastor's mansion with the house of prayer.

Like image of solemnity conjoin'd
With feminine allurements soft and fair,
The mansion's self display'd ; a reverend pile
With bold projections and recesses deep ;
Shadowy, yet gay and lightsome as it stood
Fronting the noontide sun. We paused to admire
The pillar'd porch, elaborately emboss'd ;
The low wide windows with their mullions old ;
The cornice richly fretted, of gray stone ;
And that smooth slope from which the dwelling rose,
By beds and banks Arcadian of gay flowers
And flowering shrubs, protected and adorn'd.
Profusion bright ! and every flower assuming
A more than natural vividness of hue,
From unaffected contrast with the gloom
Of sober cypress, and the darker foil
Of yew, in which survived some traces, here
Not unbecoming, of grotesque device
And uncouth fancy. From behind the roof
Rose the slim ash and massy sycamore,
Blending their diverse foliage with the green
Of ivy, flourishing and thick, that clasp'd
The huge round chimneys, harbour of delight

For wren and redbreast, where they sit and sing
Their slender ditties when the trees are bare.
Nor must I pass unnoticed (leaving else
The picture incomplete, as it appear'd
Before our eyes) a relic of old times
Happily spared, a little Gothic niche
Of nicest workmanship ; which once had held
The sculptured image of some patron saint,
Or of the blessèd Virgin, looking down
On all who enter'd those religious doors.

But lo ! where from the rocky garden mount,
Crown'd by its antique summer-house descends,
Light as the silver fawn, a radiant girl ;
For she hath recognised her honour'd friend
The Wanderer, ever welcome ! A prompt kiss
The gladsome child bestows at his request,
And, up the flowery lawn as we advance,
Hangs on the old man with a happy look,
And with a pretty restless hand of love.
We enter ; need I tell the courteous guise
In which the lady of the place received
Our little band, with salutation meet
To each accorded ? Graceful was her port ;
A lofty stature undepress'd by time,
Whose visitation had not spared to touch
The finer lineaments of frame and face ;
To that complexion brought which prudence trusts in
And wisdom loves. But when a stately ship
Sails in smooth weather by the placid coast
On homeward voyage, what if wind and wave,
And hardship undergone in various climes,
Have caused her to abate the virgin pride,
And that full trim of inexperienced hope
With which she left her haven — not for this,
Should the sun strike her, and the impartial breeze
Play on her streamers, doth she fail to assume

Brightness and touching beauty of her own,
That charm all eyes — so bright to us appear'd
This goodly matron, shining in the beams
Of unexpected pleasure. Soon the board
Was spread, and we partook a plain repast.

Here in cool shelter, while the scorching heat
Oppress'd the fields, we sate, and entertain'd
The mid-day hours with desultory talk
From trivial themes to general argument
Passing, as accident or fancy led,
Or courtesy prescribed. While question rose
And answer flow'd, the fetters of reserve
Dropp'd from our minds ; and even the shy Recluse
Resumed the manners of his happier days ;
He in the various conversation bore
A willing, and at times a forward part ;
Yet with the grace of one who in the world
Had learn'd the art of pleasing, and had now
Occasion given him to display his skill,
Upon the steadfast vantage-ground of truth.
He gazed with admiration unsuppress'd
Upon the landscape of the sun-bright vale,
Seen, from the shady room in which we sate,
In soften'd perspective ; and more than once
Praised the consummate harmony serene
Of gravity and elegance, diffused
Around the mansion and its whole domain ;
Not, doubtless, without help of female taste
And female care. " A blessèd lot is yours ! "
He said, and with that exclamation breathed
A tender sigh ; but, suddenly the door
Opening, with eager haste two lusty boys
Appear'd, confusion checking their delight.
Not brothers they in feature or attire,
But fond companions, so I guess'd, in field,
And by the river side — from which they come,

A pair of anglers, laden with their spoil.
One bears a willow pannier on his back,
The boy of plainer garb, and more abash'd
In countenance — more distant and retired.
Twin might the other be to that fair girl
Who bounded towards us from the garden mount.
Triumphant entry this to him ! — for see,
Between his hands he holds a smooth blue stone,
On whose capacious surface is outspread
Large store of gleaming crimson-spotted trouts ;
Ranged side by side, in regular ascent,
One after one, still lessening by degrees
Up to the dwarf that tops the pinnacle.
Upon the board he lays the sky-blue stone
With its rich spoil : their number he proclaims ;
Tells from what pool the noblest had been dragg'd ;
And where the very monarch of the brook,
After long struggle, had escaped at last —
Stealing alternately at them and us
(As doth his comrade too) a look of pride.
And, verily, the silent creatures made
A splendid sight, together thus exposed ;
Dead — but not sullied or deform'd by death,
That seem'd to pity what he could not spare.

But oh ! the animation in the mien
Of those two boys ! — yea, in the very words
With which the young narrator was inspired,
When, as our questions led, he told at large
Of that day's prowess ! Him might I compare,
His look, tones, gestures, eager eloquence,
To a bold brook which splits for better speed,
And, at the self-same moment, works its way
Through many channels, ever and anon
Parted and reunited : his compeer
To the still lake, whose stillness is to the eye
As beautiful, as grateful to the mind.

But to what object shall the lovely girl
 Be liken'd? She whose countenance and air
 Unite the graceful qualities of both,
 E'en as she shares the pride and joy of both.

My gray-hair'd friend was moved ; his vivid eye
 Glisten'd with tenderness ; his mind I knew,
 Was full, and had, I doubted not, return'd,
 Upon this impulse, to the theme erewhile
 Abruptly broken off. The ruddy boys
 Did now withdraw to take their well-earn'd meal ;
 And he, (to whom all tongues resign'd their rights
 With willingness — to whom the general ear
 Listen'd with readier patience than to strain
 Of music, lute, or harp, — a long delight,
 That ceased not when his voice had ceased,) as one
 Who from truth's central point serenely views
 The compass of his argument, began
 Mildly, and with a clear and steady tone.

DISCOURSE OF THE WANDERER, AND AN EVENING VISIT TO THE LAKE.

Wanderer asserts that an active principle pervades the universe—
 Its noblest seat the human soul — How lively this principle is in childhood — Hence the delight in old age of looking back upon childhood — The dignity, powers, and privileges of age asserted — These not to be looked for generally, but under a just government — Right of a human creature to be exempt from being considered as a mere instrument — Vicious inclina-

tions are best kept under by giving good ones an opportunity to shew themselves — The condition of multitudes deplored from want of due respect to this truth on the part of their superiors in society — Former conversation recurred to, and the Wanderer's opinions set in a clearer light — Genuine principles of equality — Truth placed within reach of the humblest — Happy state of the two boys again adverted to — Earnest wish expressed for a system of national education established universally by Government — Glorious effects of this foretold — Wanderer breaks off — Walk to the lake — Embark — Description of scenery and amusements — Grand spectacle from the side of a hill — Address of Priest to the Supreme Being, in the course of which he contrasts with ancient barbarism the present appearance of the scene before him — The change ascribed to Christianity — Apostrophe to his flock, living and dead — Gratitude to the Almighty — Return over the lake — Parting with the Solitary — Under what circumstances.

“To every form of being is assign'd,”
 Thus calmly spake the venerable sage,
 “An active principle : howe'er removed
 From sense and observation, it subsists
 In all things, in all natures, in the stars
 Of azure heaven, the unenduring clouds,
 In flower and tree, in every pebbly stone
 That paves the brooks, the stationary rocks,
 The moving waters, and the invisible air.
 Whate'er exists hath properties that spread
 Beyond itself, communicating good,
 A simple blessing, or with evil mix'd ;
 Spirit that knows no insulated spot,
 No chasm, no solitude : from link to link
 It circulates, the soul of all the worlds.
 This is the freedom of the universe ;
 Unfolded still the more, more visible,
 The more we know, and yet is revered least,
 And least respected, in the human mind,
 Its most apparent home. The food of hope
 Is meditated action ; robb'd of this,
 Her sole support, she languishes and dies.

We perish also ; for we live by hope
And by desire ; we see by the glad light,
And breathe the sweet air of futurity ;
And so we live, or else we have no life.
To-morrow, nay, perchance, this very hour,
(For every moment has its own to-morrow,)
Those blooming boys, whose hearts are almost sick
With present triumph, will be sure to find
A field before them freshen'd with the dew
Of other expectations ; in which course
Their happy year spins round. The youth obeys
A like glad impulse ; and so moves the man
'Mid all his apprehensions, cares, and fears ;
Or so he ought to move. Ah ! why in age
Do we revert so fondly to the walks
Of childhood, but that there the soul discerns
The dear memorial footsteps unimpair'd
Of her own native vigour — but for this
That it is given her thence in age to hear
Reverberations, and a choral song,
Commingling with the incense that ascends,
Undaunted, towards the imperishable heavens,
From her own lonely altar ? Do not think
That good and wise will ever be allow'd,
Though strength decay, to breathe in such estate
As shall divide them wholly from the stir
Of hopeful nature. Rightly is it said
That man descends into the vale of years ;
Yet have I thought that we might also speak,
And not presumptuously, I trust, of age,
As of a final eminence, though bare
In aspect and forbidding, yet a point
On which 'tis not impossible to sit
In awful sovereignty ; a place of power —
A throne, which may be liken'd unto his,
Who, in some placid day of summer, looks Down from a mountain-top, — say one of those

High peaks, that bound the vale where now we are.
Faint and diminish'd to the gazing eye,
Forest and field, and hill and dale, appear,
With all the shapes upon their surface spread.
But while the gross and visible frame of things
Relinquishes its hold upon the sense,
Yea, almost on the mind itself, and seems
All unsubstantialized — how loud the voice
Of waters, with invigorated peal
From the full river in the vale below
Ascending ! for on that superior height
Who sits is disencumber'd from the press
Of near obstructions, and is privileged
To breathe in solitude, above the host
Of ever-humming insects, 'mid thin air
That suits not them. The murmur of the leaves,
Many and idle, touches not his ear :
This he is freed from, and from thousand notes
Not less unceasing, not less vain than these,
By which the finer passages of sense
Are occupied ; and the soul, that would incline
To listen, is prevented or deterr'd.

“ And may it not be hoped that, placed by age
In like removal, tranquil, though severe,
We are not so removed for utter loss,
But for some favour, suited to our need ?
What more than this, that we thereby should gain
Fresh power to commune with th' invisible world,
And hear the mighty stream of tendency
Uttering, for elevation of our thought,
A clear, sonorous voice, inaudible
To the vast multitude, whose doom it is
To run the giddy round of vain delight,
Or fret and labour in the plain below.
But, if to such sublime ascent the hopes
Of man may rise, as to a welcome close

And termination of his mortal course,
Then only can such hope inspire whose minds
Have not been starved by absolute neglect,
Nor bodies crush'd by unremitting toil ;
To whom kind Nature, therefore, may afford
Proof of the sacred love she bears for all ;
Whose birthright reason, therefore, may insure.
For me, consulting what I feel within
In times when most existence with herself
Is satisfied, I cannot but believe,
That, far as kindly Nature hath free scope
And reason's sway predominates, even so far,
Country, society, and time itself,
That saps the individual's bodily frame,
And lays the generations low in dust,
Do by th' almighty Ruler's grace, partake
Of one maternal spirit, bringing forth
And cherishing with ever-constant love
That tires not, nor betrays. Our life is turn'd
Out of her course, wherever man is made
An offering or a sacrifice, a tool
Or implement, a passive thing employ'd
As a brute mean, without acknowledgement
Of common right or interest in the end ;
Used or abused, as selfishness may prompt.
Say, what can follow for a rational soul
Perverted thus, but weakness in all good,
And strength in evil? Hence an after-call
For chastisement, and custody, and bonds,
And oftentimes death, avenger of the past,
And the sole guardian in whose hands we dare
Intrust the future. Not for these sad issues
Was man created ; but t' obey the law
Of life, and hope, and action. And 'tis known,
That when we stand upon our native soil,
Unelbow'd by such objects as oppress
Our active powers, those powers themselves become

Strong to subvert our noxious qualities :
They sweep away infection from the heart,
And, by the substitution of delight,
Suppress all evil ; whence the being moves
In beauty through the world ; and all who see Bless him, rejoicing in his neighbourhood."

"Then," said the Solitary, "by what power
Of language shall a feeling heart express
Her sorrow for that multitude in whom
We look for health from seeds that have been sown
In sickness, and for increase in a power
That works but by extinction? On themselves
They cannot lean, nor turn to their own hearts
To know what they must do ; their wisdom is
To look into the eyes of others, thence
To be instructed what they must avoid :
Or rather, let us say, how least observed,
How with most quiet and most silent death,
With the least taint and injury to the air
The oppressor breathes, their human form divine,
And their immortal soul, may waste away."

The sage rejoin'd : "I thank you—you have spared
My voice the utterance of a keen regret,
A wide compassion, which with you I share,
When, heretofore, I placed before your sight
A most familiar object of our days—
A little one, subjected to the arts
Of modern ingenuity, and made
The senseless member of a vast machine,
Serving as doth a spindle or a wheel,
Think not that, pitying him, I could forget
The rustic boy, who walks the fields untaught,
The slave of ignorance, and oft of want,
And miserable hunger. Much—too much,
Of this unhappy lot, in early youth

We both have witness'd, lot which I myself
Shared, though in mild and merciful degree :
Yet was my mind to hindrances exposed,
Through which I struggled, not without distress
And sometime injury, like a sheep enthrall'd
'Mid thorns and brambles ; or a bird that breaks
Through a strong net, and mounts upon the wind,
Though with her plumes impair'd. If they, whose souls
Should open while they range the richer fields
Of merry England, are obstructed less
By indigence, their ignorance is not less,
Nor less to be deplored. For who can doubt
That tens of thousands at this day exist
Such as the boy you painted, lineal heirs
Of those who once were vassals of her soil,
Following its fortunes like the beasts or trees
Which it sustain'd. But no one takes delight
In this oppression ; none are proud of it ;
It bears no sounding name, nor ever bore ;
A standing grievance, an indigenous vice
Of every country under heaven. My thoughts
Were turn'd to evils that are new and chosen,
A bondage lurking under shape of good, —
Arts, in themselves beneficent and kind,
But all too fondly follow'd and too far ;
To victims, which the merciful can see
Nor think that they are victims, turn'd to wrongs,
Which women, who have children of their own,
Regard without compassion, yea, with praise !
I spake of mischief which the wise diffuse
With gladness, thinking that the more it spreads,
The healthier, the securer, we become ;
Delusion which a moment may destroy !
Lastly, I mourn'd for those whom I had seen
Corrupted and cast down, on favour'd ground,
Where circumstances and nature had combined
To shelter innocence, and cherish love :

Who, but for this intrusion, would have lived,
Possess'd of health, and strength, and peace of mind ;
Thus would have lived, or never have been born.

“ Alas ! what differs more than man from man !
And whence that difference—whence but from himself ?
For see the universal race endow'd
With the same upright form—the sun is fix'd,
And the infinite magnificence of heaven,
Within the reach of every human eye ;
The sleepless ocean murmurs for all ears ;
The vernal field infuses fresh delight
Into all hearts, Throughout the world of sense,
Even as an object is sublime or fair,
That object is laid open to the view
Without reserve or veil ; and as a power
Is salutary, or an influence sweet,
Are each and all enabled to perceive
That power, that influence, by impartial law.
Gifts nobler are vouchsafed to all ;
Reason, and, with that reason, smiles and tears ;
Imagination, freedom in the will ;
Conscience to guide and check ; and death to be Foretasted, immortality presumed.
Strange, then, not less than monstrous, might be deem'd
The failure, if the Almighty, to this point
Liberal and undistinguishing, should hide
The excellence of moral qualities
From common understanding ; leaving truth
And virtue, difficult, abstruse, and dark,
Hard to be won, and only by a few !
Strange, should He deal herein with nice respects,
And frustrate all the rest ! Believe it not :
The primal duties shine aloft—like stars ;
The charities that soothe and heal, and bless,
Are scatter'd at the feet of man—like flowers.
The generous inclination, the just rule,

Kind wishes, and good actions, and pure thoughts —
No mystery is here ; no special boon
For high, and not for low ; for proudly graced —
And not for meek of heart. The smoke ascends
To heaven as lightly from the cottage hearth
As from the haughty palace. He, whose soul
Ponders this true equality, may walk
The fields of earth with gratitude and hope ;
Yet, in that meditation, will he find
Motives to sadder grief, as we have found ;
Lamenting ancient virtues overthrown,
And for the injustice grieving that hath made
So wide a difference betwixt man and man.

“ Then let us rather fix our gladden'd thoughts
Upon the brighter scene. How blest that pair
Of blooming boys (whom we beheld even now)
Blest in their several and their common lot !
A few short hours of each returning day,
The thriving prisoners of their village school ;
And then let loose, to seek their pleasant homes
Or range the grassy lawn in vacancy ;
To breathe and to be happy, run and shout,
Idle, — but no delay, no harm, no loss ;
For every genial power of heaven and earth,
Throughout all the seasons of the changeful year,
Obsequiously doth take upon herself
To labour for them — bringing each in turn
The tribute of enjoyment, knowledge, health,
Beauty, or strength ! Such privilege is theirs,
Granted alike in the outset of their course
To both ; and, if that partnership must cease,
I grieve not,” — to the Pastor here he turn'd,
“ Much as I glory in that child of yours,
Repine not for his cottage comrades, whom Belike no higher destiny awaits
Than the old hereditary wish fulfill'd

The wish for liberty to live — content
With what heaven grants — and die, in peace of mind,
Within the bosom of his native vale.
At least, whatever fate the noon of life
Reserves for either, this is sure, that both
Have been permitted to enjoy the dawn ;
Whether regarded as a jocund time,
That in itself may terminate, or lead
In course of nature to a sober eve.
Both have been fairly dealt with ; looking back
They will allow that justice has in them
Been shewn, alike to body and to mind.”

He paused, as if revolving in his soul
Some weighty matter ; then, with fervent voice
And an impassion'd majesty, exclaim'd —

“ Oh for the coming of that glorious time
When, prizing knowledge at her noblest wealth
And best protection, this imperial realm,
While she exacts allegiance, shall admit
An obligation, on her part, to teach
Them who are born to serve her and obey ;
Binding herself by statute to secure
For all the children whom her soil maintains
The rudiments of letters, and to inform
The mind with moral and religious truth,
Both understood and practised, — so that none,
However destitute, be left to droop
By timely culture unsustain'd ; or run
Into a wild disorder ; or be forced
To drudge through weary life without the aid
Of intellectual implements and tools ;
A savage horde among the civilised,
A servile band among the lordly free !
This right, as sacred almost as the right
To exist and be supplied with sustenance

And means of life, the lisping babe proclaims
To be inherent in him, by Heaven's will,
For the protection of his innocence ;
And the rude boy — who, having overpass'd
The sinless age, by conscience is enroll'd,
Yet mutinously knits his angry brow,
And lifts his wilful hand on mischief bent,
Or turns the sacred faculty of speech
To impious use — by process indirect
Declares his due, while he makes known his need.
This sacred right is fruitlessly announced,
This universal plea in vain address'd,
To eyes and ears of parents who themselves
Did, in the time of their necessity,
Urge it in vain ; and, therefore, like a prayer
That from the humblest floor ascends to Heaven,
It mounts to reach the State's parental ear ;
Who, if indeed she own a mother's heart,
And be not most unfeelingly devoid
Of gratitude to Providence, will grant
The unquestionable good — which, England, safe
From interference of external force,
May grant at leisure ; without risk incurr'd
That what in wisdom for herself she doth,
Others shall e'er be able to undo.

“Look ! and behold, from Calpe's sunburnt cliffs
To the flat margin of the Baltic Sea,
Long-reverenced titles cast away as weeds ;
Laws overturn'd ; and territory split,
Like fields of ice rent by the polar wind,
And forced to join in less obnoxious shapes
Which, ere they gain consistence, by a gust
Of the same breath are shatter'd and destroy'd.
Meantime the sovereignty of these fair isles
Remains entire and indivisible :
And, if that ignorance were removed which acts

Within the compass of their several shores
To breed commotion and disquietude,
Each might preserve the beautiful repose
Of heavenly bodies shining in their spheres.
The discipline of slavery is unknown
Amongst us, — hence the more do we require
The discipline of virtue ; order else
Cannot subsist, nor confidence, nor peace.
Thus, duties rising out of good possess'd,
And prudent caution needful to avert
Impending evil, do alike require
That permanent provision should be made
For the whole people to be taught and train'd.
So shall licentiousness and black resolve
Be rooted out, and virtuous habits take
Their place ; and genuine piety descend,
Like an inheritance, from age to age.

“With such foundations lain, avaunt the fear
Of numbers crowded on their native soil,
To the prevention of all healthful growth,
Through mutual injury ! Rather in the law
Of increase and the mandate from above
Rejoice ! — and ye have special cause for joy.
For, as the element of air affords
An easy passage to the industrious bees
Fraught with their burthens ; and a way as smooth
For those ordain'd to take their sounding flight
From the throng'd hive, and settle where they list
In fresh abodes — their labours to renew ;
So the wide waters, open to the power,
The will, the instincts, and appointed needs
Of Britian, do invite her to cast off
Her swarms, and in succession send them forth,
Bound to establish new communities
On every shore whose aspect favours hope
Or bold adventure : promising to skill

And perseverance their deserved reward.
Yes," he continued, kindling as he spake,
"Change wide and deep, and silently perform'd,
This land shall witness ; and, as days roll on,
Earth's universal frame shall feel th' effect
Even till the smallest habitable rock,
Beaten by lonely billows, hear the songs
Of humanized society ; and bloom
With civil arts, and send their fragrance forth,
A grateful tribute to all-ruling Heaven.
From culture, universally bestow'd
On Britain's noble race in freedom born,
Expect these mighty issues : from the pains
And quiet care and unambitious schools,
Instructing simple childhood's ready ear,
Thence look for these magnificent results !
Vast the circumference of hope — and ye
Are at its centre, British lawgivers :
Ah ! sleep not there in shame ! Shall Wisdom's voice,
From out the bosom of these troubled times
Repeat the dictates of her calmer mind,
And shall the venerable halls ye fill
Refuse to echo the sublime decree ?
Trust not to partial care a general good ;
Transfer not to futurity a work
Of urgent need. Your country must complete
Her glorious destiny. Begin even now,
Now, when oppression, like the Egyptian plague
Of darkness, stretch'd o'er guilty Europe, makes
The brightness more conspicuous, that invests
The happy island where ye think and act ;
Now, when destruction is a prime pursuit,
Shew to the wretched nations for what end
The powers of civil polity were given."

Abruptly here, but with a graceful air,
The sage broke off. No sooner had he ceased

Than, looking forth, the gentle lady said,
"Behold the shades of afternoon hath fallen
Upon this flow'ry slope ; and see — beyond —
The lake, though bright, is of a placid blue,
As if preparing for the peace of evening.
How temptingly the landscape shines ! The air
Breathes invitation ; easy is the walk
To the lake's margin, where a boat lies moor'd
Beneath a shelt'ring tree." Upon this hint
We rose together ; all well pleased ; but most
The beauteous girl, whose cheek was flush'd with joy.
Light as a sunbeam glides along the hills
She vanish'd — eager to impart the scheme
To her loved brother and his shy compeer.
Now was there bustle in the Vicar's house
And earnest preparation. Forth we went,
And down the valley on the streamlet's bank
Pursued our way, a broken company,
Mute or conversing, single or in pairs.
Thus, having reach'd a bridge, that overarch'd
The hasty rivulet, where it lay becalm'd
In a deep pool, by happy chance we saw
A twofold image ; on a grassy bank
A snow-white ram, and in the crystal flood
Another and the same ! Most beautiful,
On the green turf, with his imperial front
Shaggy and bold, and wreath'd horns superb,
The breathing creature stood ; as beautiful,
Beneath him, shew'd his shadowy counterpart.
Each had his glowing mountains, each his sky,
And each seem'd centre of his own fair world :
Antipodes unconscious of each other,
Yet, in partition, with their several spheres,
Blended in perfect stillness, to our sight !

"Ah ! what a pity were it to disperse,
Or to disturb, so fair a spectacle,

And yet a breath can do it !”

These few words

The lady whisper'd, while we stood and gazed
Gather'd together, all in still delight,
Not without awe. Thence passing on, she said
In like low voice to my particular ear,
“ I love to hear that eloquent old man
Pour forth his meditations, and descant
On human life from infancy to age.
How pure his spirit — in what vivid hues
His mind gives back the various forms of things,
Caught in their fairest, happiest attitude !
While he is speaking, I have power to see
Even as he sees ; but when his voice hath ceased,
Then, with a sigh, I sometimes feel, as now,
That combinations so serene and bright,
Like those reflected in yon quiet pool,
Cannot be lasting in a world like ours,
To great and small disturbances exposed.”
More had she said — but sportive shouts were heard ;
Sent from the jocund hearts of those two boys.
Who, bearing each a basket on his arm,
Down the green field came tripping after us.
When we had cautiously embark'd, the pair
Now for a prouder service were address'd :
But an inexorable law forbade,
And each resign'd the oar which he had seized.
Whereat, with willing hand I undertook
The needful labour—grateful task ! — to me
Pregnant with recollections of the time
When, on thy bosom, spacious Windermere !
A youth, I practised this delightful art ;
Toss'd on the waves alone, or, 'mid a crew
Of joyous comrades. Now the reedy marge
Clear'd, with a strenuous arm I dipp'd the oar
Free from obstruction ; and the boat advanced
Through crystal water, smoothly as a hawk,

That, disentangled from the shady boughs
Of some thick wood, her place of covert, cleaves
With correspondent wings th' abyss of air.
"Observe," the Vicar said, "yon rocky isle
With birch-trees fringed ; my hand shall guide the helm,
While thitherward we bend our course ; or while
We seek that other, on the western shore, —
Where the bare columns of those lofty firs,
Supporting gracefully a massy dome
Of sombre foliage, seem to imitate
A Grecian temple rising from the deep."

"Turn where we may," said I, "we cannot err
In this delicious region." Cultured slopes,
Wild tracts of forest ground, and scatter'd groves,
And mountains bare, or clothed with ancient woods,
Surrounded us ; and, as we held our way
Along the level of the grassy flood
They ceased not to surround us ; change of place,
From kindred features diversely combined,
Producing change of beauty ever new.
Ah ! that such beauty, varying in the light
Of living nature, cannot be portray'd
By words, nor by the pencil's silent skill ;
But is the property of him alone
Who hath beheld it, noted it with care,
And in his mind recorded it with love !
Suffice it, therefore, if the rural muse
Vouchsafe sweet influence, while her poet speaks
Of trivial occupations well devised,
And unsought pleasures springing up by chance ;
As if some friendly genius had ordain'd
That, as the day thus far had been enrich'd
By acquisition of sincere delight,
The same should be continued to its close.

One spirit animating old and young,

A gipsy fire we kindled on the shore
Of the fair isle with birch-trees fringed — and there,
Merrily seated in a ring, partook
The beverage drawn from China's fragrant herb.
Launch'd from our hands, the smooth stone skimm'd the lake ;

With shouts we roused the echoes ; stiller sounds
The lovely girl supplied — a simple song,
Whose low tones reached not to the distant rocks
To be repeated there, but gently sank
Into our hearts, and charm'd the peaceful flood.
Rapaciously we gather'd flow'ry spoils
From land and water ! lilies of each hue —
Golden and white, that float upon the waves,
And court the wind ; and leaves of that shy plant
(Her flowers were shed) the lily of the vale,
That loves the ground, and from the sun withholds
Her pensive beauty ; from the breeze her sweets.

Such product and such pastime did the place
And season yield ; but, as we re-embark'd,
Leaving, in quest of other scenes, the shore
Of that wild spot, the Solitary said,
In a low voice, yet careless who might hear,
“ The fire, that burn'd so brightly to our wish,
Where is it now ? Deserted on the beach,
It seems extinct ; nor shall the fanning breeze
Revive its ashes. What care we for this,
Whose ends are gain'd. Behold an emblem here
Of one day's pleasure, and all mortal joys !
And, in this unpremeditated slight
Of that which is no longer needed, see
The common course of human gratitude ! ”

This plaintive note disturb'd not the repose
Of the still evening. Right across the lake
Our pinnace moves : then, coasting creek and bay,

Glades we beheld, and into thicket's peep'd,
Where couched the spotted deer; or raised our eyes
To shaggy steeps on which the careless goat
Browsed by the side of dashing waterfalls.
Thus did the bark, meandering with the shore,
Pursue her voyage, till a point was gain'd
Where a projecting line of rock, that framed
A natural pier, invited us to land.

Alert to follow as the Pastor led,
We clomb a green hill's side, and thence obtain'd,
Slowly, a less and less obstructed sight
Of the flat meadows and indented coast
Of the whole lake, in compass seen : far off
And yet conspicuous, stood the old church-tower
In majesty presiding o'er the vale
And all her dwellings ; seemingly preserved
From the intrusion of a restless world
By rocks impassable and mountains huge.

Soft heath this elevated spot supplied,
With resting-place of mossy stone ; and there
We sate reclined, admiring quietly
The frame and general aspect of the scene ;
And each not seldom eager to make known
His own discoveries ; or to favourite points
Directing notice, merely from a wish
T' impart a joy, imperfect while unshared.
That rapturous moment ne'er shall I forget
When these particular interests were effaced
From every mind ! Already had the sun,
Sinking with less than ordinary state,
Attain'd his western bounds ; but rays of light—
Now suddenly diverging from the orb,
Retired behind the mountain tops or veil'd
By the dense air—shot upwards to the crown
Of the blue firmament—aloft—and wide ;

And multitudes of little floating clouds,
Pierced through their thin ethereal mould, ere we,
Who saw, of change were conscious, had become Vivid as fire — clouds separately poised,
Innumerable multitude of forms
Scatter'd through half the circle of the sky ;
And giving back, and shedding each on each,
With prodigal communion, the bright hues
Which from the unapparent fount of glory
They had imbibed, and ceased not to receive.
That which the heavens display'd, the liquid deep
Repeated ; but with unity sublime !

While from the grassy mountain's open side
We gazed, in silence hush'd, with eyes intent
On the refulgent spectacle, diffused
Through earth, sky, water, and all visible space,
The Priest, in holy transport, thus exclaim'd :—

“ Eternal Spirit ! universal God !
Power inaccessible to human thought
Save by degrees and steps which 'Thou hast deign'd
To furnish ; for this image of Thyself,
To the infirmity of mortal sense -
Vouchsafed ; this local, transitory type
Of Thy paternal splendours, and the pomp
Of those who fill Thy courts in highest heaven,
The radiant cherubim ;— accept the thanks
Which we, Thy humble creatures, here convened,
Presume to offer ; we, who from the breast
Of the frail earth, permitted to behold
The faint reflections only of Thy face,
Are yet exalted, and in soul adore !
Such as they are who in Thy presence stand
Unsullied, incorruptible, and drink
Imperishable majesty stream'd forth
From Thy empyreal throne, the elect of earth

Shall be — divested at the appointed hour
Of all dishonour — cleansed from mortal stain.
Accomplish, then, their number ; and conclude
Time's weary course ! Or if, by Thy decree,
The consummation that will come by stealth
Be yet far distant, let Thy Word prevail,
Oh ! let Thy Word prevail, to take away
The sting of human nature. Spread the law,
As it is written in Thy holy book,
Throughout all lands ; let every nation hear
The high behest, and every heart obey :
Both for the love of purity, and hope
Which it affords, to such as do Thy will
And persevere in good, that they shall rise,
To have a nearer view of Thee in heaven.
Father of good ! this prayer in bounty grant,
In mercy grant it to Thy wretched sons.
Then, nor till then, shall persecutions cease,
And cruel wars expire. The way is mark'd,
The guide appointed, and the ransom paid.
Alas ! the nations, who of yore received
These tidings, and in Christian temples meet
The sacred truth to acknowledge, linger still ;
Preferring bonds and darkness to a state
Of holy freedom, by redeeming love
Profer'd to all, while yet on earth detain'd.
So fare the many ; and the thoughtful few,
Who, in the anguish of their souls, bewail
This dire perverseness, cannot choose but ask,
Shall it endure ? Shall enmity and strife,
Falsehood and guile, be left to sow their seed
And the kind never perish ? Is the hope
Fallacious, or shall righteousness obtain
A peaceable dominion, wide as earth,
And ne'er to fail ? Shall that blest day arrive
When they, whose choice or lot it is to dwell
In crowded cities, without fear shall live

Studious of mutual benefit — and he,
Whom morning wakes, among sweet dews and flowers
Of every clime, to till the lonely field,
Be happy in himself? The law of faith,
Working through love, such conquest shall it gain?
Such triumph over sin and guilt achieve?
Almighty Lord, thy further grace impart!
And with that help the wonder shall be seen
Fulfill'd, the hope accomplish'd; and Thy praise
Be sung with transport and unceasing joy.

“ Once, while the name Jehovah was a sound
Within the circuit of this sea-girt isle
Unheard, the savage nations bow'd their heads
To gods delighting in remorseless deeds;
Gods which themselves had fashion'd, to promote Ill purposes, and flatter foul desires.
Then, in the bosom of yon mountain cove,
To those inventions of corrupted man
Mysterious rites were solemnised; and there,
Amid impending rocks and gloomy woods,
Of those dread idols, some, perchance, received
Such dismal service, that the loudest voice
Of the swoln cataracts (which now are heard Soft murmuring) was too weak to overcome,
Though aided by wild winds, the groans and shrieks
Of human victims, offered up to appease
Or to propitiate. And, if living eyes
Had visionary faculties to see
The thing that hath been as the thing that is,
Aghast we might behold this spacious mere
Bedimm'd with smoke, in wreaths voluminous,
Flung from the body of devouring fires,
To Taranis erected on the heights
By priestly hands, for sacrifice perform'd
Exultingly, in view of open day
And full assemblage of a barbarous host;

Or to Andates, female power ! who gave (For so they fancied) glorious victory.
A few rude monuments of mountain stone
Survive ; all else is swept away. — How bright
The appearances of things ! From such how changed
The existing worship ; and, with those compared,
The worshippers how innocent and blest !
So wide the difference, a willing mind
At this affecting hour might almost think
That Paradise, the lost abode of man,
Was raised again : and to a happy few,
In its original beauty, here restored.

“ Whence but from Thee, the true and only God,
And from the faith derived through Him who bled
Upon the cross, this marvellous advance
Of good from evil ; as if one extreme
Were left — the other gain’d. O ye, who come
To kneel devoutly in yon reverend pile,
Call’d to such office by the peaceful sound
Of Sabbath bells ; and ye who sleep in earth,
All cares forgotten, round its hallow’d walls !
For you, in presence of this little band
Gather’d together on the green hill-side,
Your Pastor is embolden’d to prefer
Vocal thanksgivings to the eternal King ;
Whose love, whose counsel, whose commands have made
Your very poorest rich in peace of thought
And in good works ; and him, who is endow’d
With scantiest knowledge, master of all truth
Which the salvation of his soul requires.
Conscious of that abundant favour shower’d
On you, the children of my humble care ;
On your abodes, ’mid this beloved land,
Our birthplace, home, and country, while on earth
We sojourn, — loudly do I utter thanks
With earnest joy, that will not be suppress’d.

These barren rocks, your stern inheritance ;
These fertile fields, that recompense your pains ;
The shadowy vale, the sunny mountain-top ;
Woods waving in the wind their lofty heads,
Or hush'd ; the roaring waters, or the still ; —
They see the offering of my lifted hands —
They hear my lips present their sacrifice —
They know if I be silent, morn or even :
For though in whispers speaking, the full heart
Will find a vent ; and thought is praise to Him,
Audible praise to Thee, omniscient Mind,
From whom all gifts descend, all blessings flow ! ”

This vesper service closed, without delay,
From that exalted station, to the plain
Descending, we pursued our homeward course
In mute composure, o'er the shadowy lake,
Beneath a faded sky. No trace remain'd
Of those celestial splendours ; gray the vault,
Pure, cloudless ether ; and the star of eve
Was wanting ; but inferior lights appear'd
Faintly, too faint almost for sight ; and some Above the darken'd hills stood boldly forth
In twinkling lustre, ere the boat attain'd
Her mooring-place ; where, to the sheltering tree,
Our youthful voyagers bound fast her prow,
With prompt yet careful hands. This done, we paced
The dewy fields ; but ere the Vicar's door
Was reach'd, the Solitary check'd his steps ;
Then, intermingling thanks, on each bestow'd
A farewell salutation, and the like
Receiving, took the slender path that leads
To the one cottage in the lonely dell,
His chosen residence. But, ere he turn'd
Aside, a welcome promise had been given
That he would share the pleasures and pursuits
Of yet another summer's day, consumed

In wandering with us through the valleys fair
 And o'er the mountain wastes. "Another sun"
 Said he, "shall shine upon us ere we part,
 Another sun, and peradventure more ;
 If time, with free consent, be yours to give,
 And season favours." *

To enfeebled power,
 From this communion with uninjured minds,
 What renovation had been brought ; and what
 Degree of healing to a wounded spirit,
 Dejected, and habitually disposed
 To seek, in degradation of the kind,
 Excuse and solace for her own defects ;
 How far those erring notions were reform'd ;
 And whether aught of tendency as good
 And pure, from further intercourse ensued ;
 This (if delightful hopes, as heretofore,
 Inspire the serious song, and gentle hearts
 Cherish, and lofty minds approve the past)
 My future labours may not leave untold.

* "When," says Wordsworth in his illustrative notices of The Excursion, "I reported this promise of the 'Solitary,' and long after, it was my wish, and I might say intention, that we should resume our wanderings and pass the borders into his native country, where, as I hoped, he might witness, in the society of the 'Wanderer,' some religious ceremony — a sacrament say, in the open fields, or a preaching among the mountains, which, by recalling to his mind the days of his early childhood, when he had been present on such occasions in company with his parents and nearest kindred, might have dissolved his heart into tenderness, and so done more towards restoring the Christian faith in which he had been educated, and, with that, contentedness and even cheerfulness of mind, and all that the 'Wanderer' and 'Pastor' by their several effusions and addresses had been unable to effect. An issue like this was in my intentions, but alas !

'Mid the wreck of is and was,
 Things incomplete and purposes betrayed
 Make sadder transits o'er thought's optic glass
 Than noblest objects utterly decayed.' "
